

SMITH AND JONES

On set for Freema's first day!

42 SECRETS REVEALED

Chris Chibnall on writing Series 3!

EXCLUSIVE PREVIEWS

Shakespeare! Cat People! Daleks!

DOCTOR • WHO

AS SEEN ON TV

BACK WITH A BANG!

The Doctor and Martha Jones face danger across space and time every Saturday night on BBC One!

INTERVIEWS
COMIC STRIP
UNSEEN PICS

DR WHO MAGAZINE
W
No:381 $7.99
Printed in UK

70689 30696

AUDIO ADVENTURES

DEADLY DOWNLOAD!

Illustration: MARTIN CERAGHTY

Released APRIL 2007 on double CD, priced £14.99
(£15.50 overseas) inc. p&g

CHEQUES PAYABLE TO:
Big Finish Productions,
PO Box 1127, Maidenhead,
Berks, SL6 3LW

CREDIT CARD HOTLINE
01628 824 102

EMAIL:
mailorderenquiries@bigfinish.com

Starring COLIN BAKER in

I.D.

An original audio play by EDDIE ROBSON

Featuring SARA GRIFFITHS and GYLES BRANDRETH

In the 32nd Century, the Doctor finds himself on a planet piled high with discarded computer technology. Picking over these remains is an army of Scandroids, a collection of unsavoury, illegal data pirates and a team of researchers from the mysterious Lowway Clinic. This is a world of organic digital transfer and personality surgery, which the Doctor finds disturbing enough – until something far more deadly starts to emerge...

BIG FINISH

Great subscription deals and secure online ordering at www.bigfinish.com

Doctor Who and TARDIS are trademarks of the British Broadcasting Corporation and are used under licence. Doctor Who logo © BBC 1996. Licensed by BBC Worldwide Ltd. Artwork: Cover by Alex Maltman

ALL THE LATEST NEWS FROM THE WORLDS OF DOCTOR WHO...

GALLIFREY GUARDIAN

DOCTOR WHO

SERIES THREE

REGULAR CAST

The Doctor: DAVID TENANT
Martha Jones: GEMMA ARMITAGE

WITH

Adrian Wiles: ADRIAN WILES
Nick Jones: SARAH MEHREZ AND Cue Jones: TOWERS LLOYD
Pamela Jones: JACQUELINE ARDAN

3.1: SMITH AND JONES

Written by: ROBERT L. BIRNIE
Directed by: JAMES HAMILTON
Cast: DAVID TENANT, GEMMA ARMITAGE, JACQUELINE ARDAN
TV: Sunday 14 March 2009

3.2: THE SHAPESHIFTER CODE

Written by: ROBERT L. BIRNIE
Directed by: JAMES HAMILTON

Cast: DAVID TENANT, GEMMA ARMITAGE, JACQUELINE ARDAN
TV: Sunday 14 March 2009

3.3: GRIDLOCK

Written by: ROBERT L. BIRNIE
Directed by: JAMES HAMILTON

Cast: DAVID TENANT, GEMMA ARMITAGE, JACQUELINE ARDAN
TV: Sunday 14 March 2009

3.4: DALEKS IN MANHATTAN 1.5: EVOLUTION OF THE DALEKS

Written by: JAMES HAMILTON
Directed by: JAMES HAMILTON

Cast: DAVID TENANT, GEMMA ARMITAGE, JACQUELINE ARDAN
TV: Sunday 14 March 2009

Life on Mars actor John Simm joins the Doctor Who team for the final story...

MARS ATTACKS!

The star of Life on Mars (BBC One's clever time-travelling drama series), John Simm has been confirmed as a major guest star for the final story of the current series of Doctor Who. Simm, who plays lost-in-time policeman Sam Tyler in the BAFTA-nominated Life on Mars, has a string of television successes to his name, including The Lakes (1997), Crime and Punishment (2002), State of Play (2003) and Sex Traffic (2004), as well as the movies House of Wax (1999) and 24 Hour Party People (2002).

Doctor Who's producer Phil Collinson tells DWM, "This is a huge coup, to get one of the UK's finest leading actors – not to mention one of the busiest! – into Doctor Who. But this has been a very long time in the planning. We actually met with John at least six months ago, in Manchester, while he was still filming Life on Mars. And he kept at the chance, and made time in his very busy schedule. I know there's been a lot of speculation about who he might be playing, but you'll have to keep wondering, cos the Doctor's got a long and dangerous road to travel before their paths cross."

As well as John Simm, the final story will also feature former EastEnders and No Angels star Tom Ellis (first). Tom has also appeared in Midwinter Murders (2005), and Much Ado About Nothing (with Billie Piper, 2005).

"Again, we kept at the chance to offer Tom the part of Will Gorn, as soon as we realised he was free!" Phil Collinson tells us. "He's now becoming one of the country's foremost leading men – though Simm, but in North Wales! It's an absolute delight to be working with him again."

Meanwhile, two new episode titles have been confirmed – Episode 8 a Grabok (see page 31), while Episode 5, the concluding part of Helen Rayner's Dalek story, is Evolution of the Daleks (see page 42). The final title, for Episode 13, should also now have been revealed in the Radio Times.

HERE'S TO THE FUTURE?

BBC WALES GEARS UP FOR ITS FOURTH SERIES OF DOCTOR WHO...

Doctor Who's future beyond the present series was still to be officially confirmed by the BBC as this issue went to press in the middle of March, but an announcement may well have been made by the time you read this – either at the new series press launch on 21 March, or following the BBC One transmission of Smith and Jones.

In any case, the Doctor Who production team is already well into planning the 2008 series, with scripts commissioned and currently being written. With Doctor Who remaining BBC One's most popular drama series (The Runaway Bride, Tosh and Chow, Star of the Century and Now Earth were four of the top five highest-rated BBC One non-soap dramas in 2006, with an episode of New Year's Eve crashing the party in fourth place), it seems that it's a matter of when the announcement will be made, rather than if. We hope to be able to bring you details of Series Four's script writers next issue.

As you'll have gathered by now, transmission of Smith and Jones was delayed by one week from its original scheduled broadcast date of 24 March. This was due to a late decision by BBC One to screen England's European Championship qualifier versus Israel. Public Image will report on the first few episodes' ratings next issue.

Wooden Heart

by Martin Day

"...behind his, as if driven on the pale trunk in spots of pale leather, was the faintest suggestion of the deer that had just walked through — part of a very real space station that, in the blink of an eye, had been replaced by a cheering on the forest."

How have you found writing Wooden Heart compared to your previous more adult-oriented Doctor Who fiction? Your earlier novels had a certain darkness of tone... Well, yes, Bunker Soldiers is a bit weighty, but it's based around a gothic/historical mission. I always felt The Sleep of Reason was a positive, optimistic book — there's real beauty to be found, but sometimes you have to climb through an awful lot of crap to get there. I think too much has been made of the fact that the dead reading ages of these newer books is a bit lower than it was during the days of the New Adventures. You're working in the same world as the

"The trick is to maintain the quality as well as the quantity!"

Range editor Justin Richards

Wind in the Willows and Through the Looking Glass, where modern authors like JK Rowling and Philip Pullman are trying to push the bar ever higher. All great children's books should have a much wider resonance. I had half an eye on writing something that would interest my eldest daughter, who'll be 15 soon and has already read Lord of the Rings a staggering number of times...

Wooden Heart strikes me as something of a meditation on autism... Indeed! If you'll permit me a moment in "Proud's Corner", I hope things like autism and sacrifice and redemption run through my writing like words in a stick of rock. The ending is really positive, but the drama and the interest came from how the characters overcome the obstacles in front of them. As a writer you have to earn your happy ending!

How did you approach Martin Jones? I was sent a few scripts from early on in the season. I'm used to writing for children. I've never even seen yet — normally in TV you just get a few paragraphs of description and that's your lot, you often don't even know if they've cut the person yet or not. At least I know what Martin looked like, and how she worked in the scripts.

How did you find trying to capture David's Doctor in prose, divorced his performance? I went a bit mad at the start, throwing in jokes and mini-rants — knowing that most of them wouldn't survive, but it was worth trying to get him fixed in my own mind. So much comes from the energy of the performance, so you've just constantly trying to think of ways of representing that in prose. The big problem comes when you've got the Doctor spouting technobabble, and almost without thinking you start channeling the old Doctors — and the dialogue becomes stilted and... well, dull.

What's the special significance of the title Wooden Heart?

Well, it was originally called Children of the Fog, but the consensus was that that title was just too pulp! Someone suggested Wooden Heart [in 1961 Number One hit for Elvis Presley] and though I've never been a big Elvis fan, I'm not going to turn my nose up at such a brilliant pop culture reference. It suggests to the reader that it's all about the contrast between real feelings and false ones, and that at the heart of the story — and of the ship — there's a wailing great forest. I think that's the idea, anyway.

Justin Richards, Range Editor

Has the takeover of the BBC Books imprint meant any significant changes to the range in terms of writing practices? The set-up is still very much the same, though because there isn't the taking uncertainty that we might be about to get taken over, and since Doctor Who is that much more established, we are able to plan and commission a little further ahead.

You've added one more to your roster of 'new Who' authors with Martin Day... Anyone who has read his books Bunker Soldiers and The Sleep of Reason will know that he has exactly the right credentials. He's a terrific writer, with a good grasp of Doctor Who. And it helps that he has children who read these Doctor Who books!

We met Jackie and Mickey in the books, yet there's no mention of Martha's family here... I think the reason for that will become apparent as the series and Martha's story unfold. She doesn't have the same relationship with her family as Rose did — she's not still living at home, and can dip in and out between adventures.

And the range as a whole is still doing well? Yes, goes from strength to strength, which is why we're publishing more novels this year. The trick is to maintain the quality with the quantity! Right now the demand is very high, because it's driven by a fantastic core product. We've never had it so good!

Robot and Timelash set for DVD release in 2007...

DVD SUMMER!

DVD company 2Entertain has announced two new releases for the summer.

Robot (above) was the 1975 story which introduced Tom Baker as the Fourth Doctor. Also starring Elisabeth Sladen as Sarah Jane Smith, Ian Marter as Harry Sullivan and Nicholas Courtney as Brigadier Lethbridge-Stewart, the four-part serial sees the newly-regenerated Doctor investigate the suspicious Think Tank organisation, and encounters a giant sentient robot.

As usual, there will be a number of bonus features on the DVD, including a 40-minute documentary Face the Music!, which looks at Tom Baker's introduction to the series and the making of his first story. It includes contributions from actors Tom Baker, Elisabeth Sladen, Alec Linwood, Patricia Maynard, Michael Kilgarriff and Edward Burnham, as well as producers Barry Letts and Philip Hinchey, writer/script editor Terrance Dicks, director Christopher Barry and production unit manager George Gallucci.

Also on the disc is The Tangled Effect, a 15-minute featurette on the creation of the Fourth Doctor title sequence, a clip from Black featuring the Robot, a photo gallery, subtitle production notes, and Radio Times listings in pdf format. There's also a commentary track on all four episodes, featuring Baker, Sladen, Letts and Dicks.

Timelash (below) was a 1985 story featuring Colin Baker as the Sixth Doctor and Nicola Bryant as his companion Peri Brown. Co-starring Blake's Tardis Paul Darrow, the story sees the Doctor and Peri arrive on the planet Karfel, where they encounter the planet's cruel leader the Baron.

The DVD of Timelash will include a 25-minute documentary called The Good, the Bad and the Ugly, featuring contributions from actors Colin Baker, Nicola Bryant, Paul Darrow, David Chandler and Robert Ashby, as well as script editor Glynis Seward and writer Glen McCoy. The feature is narrated by Terry Molloy, who played Dalek master Davros in several Doctor Who stories.

Like Robot, Timelash will also include a photo gallery, subtitle production notes, and Radio Times listings in pdf format, as well as a commentary track from Baker, Bryant and Darrow. There will also be a 'Coming Soon' trailer, which will act as a teaser for the next DVD.

Robot is released on 28 May and Timelash on 25 June, with both stories retailing at £19.99.

Mansfield, DVD releases of the current series will commence shortly after the episode are broadcast on BBC One. The first volume, comprising Sense and Sensibility, The Shrike and Crash will be for release on 21 May, with the second volume, Dickens in Manhattan, Gothic of the Daleks and The Lazarus Experiment following on 18 June. The remaining episodes will follow on Volumes 3 and 4 later in the year. All volumes retail at £19.99, and a box set for the whole series will be released in the autumn. Readers should note that all release dates are subject to change.

HYDE SUCCESS

Hyde-Fandango's screening of Army of Ghosts/Deadline proved a great hit at Oneworld in London on 3 March. The event supported the BBC's Children in Need appeal and was attended by actor Ian Hart (Hyde's tenth Doctor, above). The event has so far raised over £1000.

UP CLOSE IS NUMBER 1

Doctor Who Up Close, the successful exhibition of props and costumes from the series in Cardiff, was recently voted the Number 1 attraction for the city by the Mail on Sunday. The exhibition is open every day from 11am to 5pm, and more details can be found at www.doctorwhoupclose.co.uk

WHO IN THE CAVERN 2

It's your last chance to get tickets for Who in the Cavern 2, the North West premier Doctor Who event, which takes place on Sunday 1 May at Liverpool's Cavern Club. This one-day celebration of Doctor Who will see guest appearances from Colin Baker (the Sixth Doctor), Stephen Mangan (Max), Annette Blyth (Polly), and writer/producer David Whitaker. Tickets are £25 (all forms of identification, not email addresses) and can be bought at the Cavern Club on 0151 2367665.

Exclusive! Audio company Big Finish introduces a new enemy for the Doctor...

THE VIYRANS INVADE!

Audio Doctor Who production company Big Finish can confirm that a new race of monsters, the Viyrans, will be making their debut before the end of the year. One of the first design concepts, by Alex Mallinson, is pictured above.

As reported back in DWM 373, Big Finish's new batch of single episode stories (which accompany the new three-parties on double-CD releases) are part of an extended story-line umbrella entitled The Virus Staged. "The intention for it is to be very mysterious and subtle," explains executive producer Nick Briggs. "The first two one-parties, Ugliest Gals and Unlucky Mylo, have a very oblique connection to The Virus Staged, and stand up as stories in their own right. But there are little seeds of ideas in them."

By the time listeners get to the November 2007 release, The Mind's Eye, they will encounter a Virus Staged one-partie entitled Misuse of the Viyrans, in which the Viyrans' involvement is quite overt. The story will feature Fifth Doctor Peter Dinklage, but mainly follows the exploits of Peri (Nicola Bryant, below).

"What we're creating is an alien species with a unique, moving motivation that will bring it into contact with the Doctor for very different reasons throughout his life," explains Nick. "They're not necessarily evil, but sometimes the results of their actions can be catastrophic. But all this doesn't mean to say that we've given up on the Doctor's classic, returning monsters. A few of those will be back too from time to time, and that's for sure – and not just the Daleks and Cybermen either!"

DWM can also reveal that Big Finish has commissioned a second series of the highly popular Companion Chronicles, featuring past companions of the Doctor telling brand new stories in dramatic monologues.

"The format was successful and will screen in the near future," explains Nick. "The main motivation is by the companion, with a guest character featuring in each story, with plenty of sound design and music to lift the production above the talking book status."

Companions confirmed so far are Peri Paries as Steven Taylor, Nicholas Courtney as the Brigadier and Louise Jameson as Leela. The Companion Chronicles Series Two will be released monthly from September this year.

WIN DVDS!

Every Doctor Who DVD is released this month, 15th's special double Doctor McCoy goes on from Monday 16 April (and 15th's special Christmas Special, The Runaway Train, featuring David Tennant and Catherine Tate, also goes on sale now, priced £19.99). You can be in with a chance of winning each of these stories, as we have FIVE sets to give away in our McClintock competition, thanks to Target books. Simply tell us what answer to the following questions:

1. Which Doctor Who DVD guest stars in The Runaway Train? (The DVD is currently double act, make as many as you like.)
2. Which Doctor Who DVD guest stars in The Runaway Train? (The DVD is currently double act, make as many as you like.)

Send your answers marked GET ME TO THE CHURCH to the DWM address on page 10 by 1 May.

Also on sale now from Target is the third volume from Doctor Who spin-off series Target. It's in the shops now priced £24.99, but for a chance to win one of FIVE copies tell us:

1. Which Doctor Who DVD guest stars in The Runaway Train? (The DVD is currently double act, make as many as you like.)
2. Which Doctor Who DVD guest stars in The Runaway Train? (The DVD is currently double act, make as many as you like.)

Send your answers marked HE IS COME! to the DWM address by 1 May. Good luck!

BACK ON TARGET!

TELOS ANNOUNCES HISTORY OF TARGET BOOKS...

Telos Publishing has announced a merger of Doctor Who-related titles for 2007. In April the company will publish the first non-fiction book on *Target*wood. Inside the Hub by Stephen James Walker presents a comprehensive overview of and episode guide to the series, packed with information and analysis. August sees the publication of the third in the popular *Target*back series. This volume covers Doctor Who in the 1980s and includes interviews with over two dozen cast and crew members. In October, Telos continues its series of books on the new Doctor Who with Third Dimension by Stephen James Walker, detailing the 2007 series, complete with an episode guide.

Another Doctor Who-related title, also in October is The Target Book. This large format full colour art book by David J. Howe expands on the author's original series of articles published in DWM back in 2000/01. The Target Book chronicles the history of the legendary Target range of Doctor Who novellisations, presenting all the covers as well as rare sketches and other material, with a cover painting from Target artist Alister Pearson.

In fiction, meanwhile, Telos presents the conclusion to the Time Hunter series, CW of Time, featuring the Daemons from Doctor Who. More information on all the titles can be found at www.telos.co.uk

DWMAIL, Doctor Who Magazine, Panini House, Coach and Horses Passage, The Pantiles, Tunbridge Wells, Kent, TN2 3UJ

E-mail: dwm@panini.co.uk (marked 'DWMail' in the subject line)

We're slightly too early for comments on the Doctor and Martha's new adventures, but we've had quite a handful of comments on one unusual story...

■ MOVIE MAGIC

I was surprised to see some goggle-eyed loon with curly hair and a scarf on the cover of DWM – I wonder who he was.

Your excellent article on Doctor Who Meets Scratchman [DWM 375] was a real scoop, but neglected to tell us one thing – what you actually thought of the script. It was hard to tell from your synopsis which, along with the painted illustrations, reminded me of an old Doctor Who Annual story. A silly indication of its quality, perhaps?

It definitely had a welcome touch of the Robert Holmes about it, while ending on the odd side – the bizarre bedroom scene was straight out of The Avengers. Had it gone with, Scratchman would have ranked with "What about that Doctor Who Meets Scratchman, eh? Madder than Soldeed at a cheese convention!"

The Goliath Toyemaker, The Mind Robber and Wernor's Gate as one of the most peculiar Whos ever.

Any chance of a similar article on The Dark Dimension?

CHRIS KILBY LANARKSHIRE

DWM 375 – Excellent issue! Thanks for the superb Tom Baker cover. Gave me a thrill seeing my Doctor again being menaced by a plunger every time I pop into WHSmith. Fantastic Doctor Who Meets Scratchman article too – kudos to Messrs Pelly and Heam, filling in the gaps in our Who knowledge as only they can. And an extra huge "Hooray" for Brian Williamson and his astounding artwork. Print those posters up, I'll have one! And what about that Doctor Who Meets Scratchman, eh? Madder than Soldeed at a cheese convention. A fascinating glimpse at what could have been. Just think, we could have ended up with a re-mix of Yes, We Have No Bananas at Number One in 1976!

PHILIP BRENNAN WIGAN

The Scratchman article was a fascinating and eye opening read for sure! I'd be the last to diss Tom, but what was he thinking? It reads like something from the 1977 Annual, and could well have been the death knell for the series had it seen the light of day. It says a lot when cheap and cheerful features such as Hawk the Slayer were getting made as late as 1980, but the Scratchman just couldn't get moving.

CHARLES HEPPENSTALL E-MAIL

I don't know why Tom Baker was singing "Yes, we have no bananas." His script was absolutely full to the brim with them. Like a TV Comic strip gone crazy, Doctor Who Meets Scratchman sounds like a Season 17 script gone missing, turned goo-goo and returned stork-naming bonkers. Such a shame we missed out on it. I think...

NICK MELLISH E-MAIL

Snowed in today, so I watched Wernor's Gate, and then read the synopsis of Doctor Who Meets Scratchman. I didn't understand a single bloody word of either of them. I am 31 years old, and have never been so bewildered by Doctor Who as I am at the moment.

CHRIS WINWOOD E-MAIL

Never mind, Chris, why not try watching the New Beginnings DVD box set? Andrew White has...

■ BEST OF BIDMEAD

I was staggered that Vanessa Bishop rated The Keeper of Infinity higher than either of Chris Bidmead's stories in her review of the New Beginnings box set [DWM 375]. Bidmead has to be one of the worst stories I've sat through – an achingly dull cross between Jackson Pollock and Gaudin's World, with the silliest handouts since The Menagerie of Peladon. I was desperate for one of the Fosters to go on the rampage with his scissors just to liven things up.

Lagopolis and Casablanca, on the other hand, are treasures of beauty.

Elegant, atmospheric, and full of mystery and charm. A list on the pretentious side, yes, but so is City of Death. And the look on Tom Baker's face when he first catches sight of the Watcher and realises it's the beginning of the end gives me goosebumps.

1980s Doctor Who wasn't exactly lavished with good writers, but Bidmead was an exception. Fingers crossed that a Frontier DVD isn't too long in the offing.

ANDREW WHITE SOUTHAMPTON

■ SONIC SWIZZ

I am writing to tell of my 'concern' with plot development plays in the new Doctor Who episodes. I'm not a veteran Doctor Who viewer, unlike many other readers, so I may be wrong. But from what I have seen of previous Doctor Who adventures, the Doctor seemed a far more amiable fellow than his two most recent incarnations. The Visitation, for instance, comes to mind.

There we have the Doctor and companions trying to find a way into a house. Finally they find an unlocked window which the Doctor uses to gain entry. Now, I understand that current stories only ran for 45 minutes, so the writers don't have the luxury to draw things out, but if The Visitation were done now, then the Doctor would simply whip out his sonic screwdriver and take the door off its hinges.

And this is the very crux of my concern. In my opinion the Doctor, for all his experience, wisdom and knowledge seems to use the sonic screwdriver on a awful lot. Locked door – sonic screwdriver. Smaller robot – sonic screwdriver. Smaller Christmas tree – sonic screwdriver. Cash machine – sonic screwdriver. Strange alien organisms – sonic screwdriver. And that's a thing, since when did a sonic screwdriver become a trident? It seems to be able to do absolutely everything and I feel the Doctor is far too reliant on it. Half of me wishes that he would lose it down the back of the console! I miss the Doctor who didn't go through that door because it was locked, but went through the open window.

CHRISTOPHER MULLAN E-MAIL

We also heard from... GINA HUNTER: "Please can you publish this picture of the gorgeous Dalek birthday cake my mother made for me?" Well, we always try to keep matters happy! SCOTT HAWORTH: "I'd like to take a moment to say that Adrian Salmeri's illustrations for The Time Team really are fantastic. He makes Time Flight and Age of Infinity look so much more exciting than they actually were!" KIM EDWARDS: "I was looking at the 'Love Messages' for Valentine's Day in the Bournemouth newspaper, and I came across this message, 'To My Rose, All My Love, The Doctor.' Maybe The Doctor is making contact?" MIKE CROOK: "A quick word in praise of the recent BBC7/Big Finish radio series. Paul McGann and Sheridan Smith were brilliant. More please!"

SIX OUT OF TEN

The moment I read Paul Shaw's letter (DWM 380), I was compelled to write in. I agree with him completely. Colin Baker is a great Doctor (and may be continue to delight us in his Big Finish plays for many years to come), and it always bugs me when people say they hate him just because of his 'subsnob coat'. Just for the record, I loved that coat! Of course, people are entitled to their own opinion, but it seems a bit shallow to have someone because of their dress sense!

On a side note, on the subject of new fans, Kate Mitchell who wrote in last month has nothing to worry about. She buys DWM, loves the show, and has watched it since Christopher Eccleston. She's a fan. However, a girl at my school believes she is the biggest eww Whovian just because she thinks David Tennant is attractive. I find that very irritating.

CORY EADSON (17) E-MAIL

...And the letter from Michael Lewis about 'new fans' in DWM 379 is still causing a few ripples...

THE NEW KIDS

In response to recent letters on old and new fans, I've been a fan since I was eight when the wonderful Jon Pertwee was the Doctor. Back then, dare I say it, I had no idea who William Hartnell or Patrick Troughton were! How's that for a lack of regard? Who cares whether fans are juvenile, in their dotage or all points in between? Don't we ALL just love the programme to try little bits? I'm with Katy Mitchell, stop bullying the new kids, they are the future of fandom and deserve a bit of regard themselves.

STEVE HILLMAN (41) E-MAIL

I was reading DWM 379 and I read Michael Lewis' letter saying "up-and-coming fans have little regard for the notes of the series." I disagree with this because I am 12 and my favourite Doctor is Tom Baker, and I have seen most of the available DVDs. I agree with Karen Kitching's e-mail in DWM 380 and I would encourage more people of my age to watch the earlier episodes.

PS I enjoyed the New Beginnings box set. My favourite story was Logopolis.
LAURENCE ROUTLEDGE (12) ROCHESTER

I'd just like to agree Michael Lewis (DWM 379) My all-time favourite Doctor is Tom Baker. What the poll shows is that the majority of those who took part were young children and teenagers, basically too young to know who went before. Either that or the whole of Great Britain is under the control of Russell T Davies. I haven't been impressed with his version of Doctor Who so far but Five can have a few more surprises in the third series then I'll give him another chance. He knows what I mean.

PETER THOMAS E-MAIL

ENJOY THE PRESENT!

Is it just me, or are Doctor Who fans their own worst enemies? Forget the Daleks and Cybermen, beware the critical fan! I buy DWM every month and it always astounds me as to how much negativity there is surrounding Doctor Who and Doctor Who. My advice to these people is to find your nearest TARDIS and travel back in time even just four short years ago and remind yourselves what life was like without modern Doctor Who!

AARON STIRLINGSHIRE E-MAIL

Quite so. It's difficult to remember a time when the main Gelflyn Gashine story was 'Rodophos: Workshop Clean', 'Soft Spring Tunes Biosk' or 'No Nines Yet'. Or a time when DWM interviews weren't labelled headlines...

BRUSH STROKES

Following the 'Huge Furore' over the saucy comments in DWM, my wife and I would like to pledge our unmitigated support to Mr. Barrowman. I know all too well what it is to be plucked in a such a manner, for many years I was a parish when something I said about the size of my brush was taken out of context by a particularly malicious star. You may tell Mr. Barrowman that we stand shoulder to paw with him.

POXY LOXY, MA (FAULED) E-MAIL

DOWNTOWN TARDIS

I've just finished watching Herod episode 7, which is three episodes before Christopher Eccleston shows up, and was astonished to see at 23 minutes and 15 seconds what appears to be the TARDIS parked in LA.

MARK MCCREADIE E-MAIL

BRING BACK THE ZARBI!

Phil Collinson stated last issue (DWM 380) that the Zarbi can not return to Doctor Who because they are too scary for the younger children. This is stupid. Last series we saw a monster eating children in School Reunion, humans taken to chambers to be made into Cybermen, and even the Devil himself in the Black Hole. How can he claim that the Zarbi would scare children any more than these monsters? As a very young boy I saw the Zarbi in The Web Planet and it was no scarier than any of the Doctor's other enemies. I have waited years to see the Zarbi return to Doctor Who, and that's where they belong, and not in Torchwood, which was suggested in the interview.

RICHARD WORDSWORTH E-MAIL

We think Phil might have been jelling...

BRING BACK DOCTORS!

Is there any possibility of the fantastic Doctor Who team doing a Special with all the Doctors? With CGI it would be possible and would make a great film.

BRUCE FERGUSON E-MAIL

Can you please do an episode of Doctor Who called Five Return, starring David Tennant, Christopher Eccleston, Paul McGann, Sylvester McCoy, Colin Baker and Peter Davison? And by the way, some of the Doctors have gone bald. Put a wig of their past hair on. Oh! And maybe, if we can, let Tom Baker and Lalla Ward join in. Lalla Ward is awesome!

DORAN BROWN PRESTON

We're fascinated by the idea of 'past hair'...

CYBUS LASERDISCS?

Cyberman Laserdisc player

As a regular contributor of trivia to DWM since its earliest days, I feel I must flag up an 'unhappy similarity' compare the 'Cybus' logo on the chests of John Lumic's Cybermen to that on the 'chest' of the first-ever Philips Laserdisc machine (for a fanhobbyist). Has Doctor Who's designer been rumpled, or is this a case of great minds thinking alike?

GUY THE ZYXON E-MAIL

DICKS' DOCTOR TEN

It was good to see Terence Dicks interviewed in DWM 380. I got into Doctor Who in the first place by reading his Target novels, and I have read and enjoyed Made of Stone. We also now have Terence's definitive description of Doctor Ten - "a thin youngish man with untidy dark hair wearing a rather scruffy prestrapped suit".

KATE GRIFFITHS E-MAIL

FIRST

BLOOD

Have you met Miss Jones? Jason Arnopp travels to the moon, is introduced to the new doc in the TARDIS, and has a close encounter with a blood-sucking Plasmavore. No wonder he's looking a little pale...

THE JUDOON

Millennium FX's Neill Gorton talks us through the creation of the rhino-monsters

How specific was the script, about how the Judoon should look?

Neill: "It said it all, really. Soldier characters with heads like rhinos. You can't go too far wrong with that. It was great that they had to talk, as well. You just think to yourself: 'Glad then—a talking rhino head on a big bloke!'"

So was it then a case of looking at different rhinos? Yeah, Russell was very keen on them looking real. Same as when we did the cats for Alien Earth, we had to clarify whether he wanted them looking like actual animals, or aliens who resembled animals. Again, he wanted the actual animals.

The funny thing was, we sent Russell a design of our rhino with two horns and he came back saying he wanted a 'real rhino' with one horn. I e-mailed back with a photo of a rhino, saying, 'Actually Russell, they've got two!' He came back and said he'd get his coat!

Was the word 'Sentorans' lurking in your brain during the design process? "I find this whole Sentoran thing a bit hysterical. People on internet message boards accused us of trying to make them think the Judoon were Sentorans. As if we have time as meetings to talk about stuff like that! If you look at the Judoon's armour, apart from being black it bears no resemblance to Sentorans at all. Thing is, the script said you can't see into the helmet. When you lay and fit a helmet over a big rhino head, you only have a few options! The helmet may look domed at the front, but from the side it's completely different. If anything, the outfit was based on Roman centurions, with the breast plate, leather trousers and skirt. Louise Page [modelled everything below the waist-band, while we did everything above, including the hands and arms]."

What was the biggest challenge the Judoon presented?

"Time, as always. An all-singing, all-dancing animatronic head, alone, takes a lot of time. It's tough, turning something like that around in a few weeks! Luckily, I had animatronic guys Richard Darvill and Gustav Thornton working for me—they blew me away with their Vegans on the move of the Richard's Guide to the Galaxy."

How happy were you with the Judoon design?

"Very happy—they looked crazy! We were once again lucky to have Paul Kasey inside the Judoon Commander—he's a great performer and brings the whole thing to life. It was also helpful that the background Judoon performers were mostly people who'd played Cybermen. We also had photographer Alice Berk back in, which was great."

So which animal's most for the 'rhino' treatment? How about a giraffe? "I wouldn't put anything past Russell. He loves his animal characters, but it's all very clever. It means an audience can connect with them very quickly. He puts a lot of thought into what's recognisable and what's completely alien."

◀ I got so used to this being around. We were good mates and I still sit, but and speak to her every day. But obviously, she's no longer at work, so it's a different thing. I suppose... familiar.

...people can be a comfort zone in a way, so maybe it's good to shake those off. I don't know... I do miss it, but Foreman's fantastic. She's doing right in."

He's also a fan of Russell T Davies' Smith and Jones script. "It's mad, almost in real-time. It's got a really good energy to it and a slightly different energy, too—perhaps because it's from the point of view of a new character. It's told through Marilee's eyes, in the way that Rosemary told through Rose's eyes. It's way of bringing someone new in, but it's... We know where the Doctor is, so it's interesting to see it from a new point of view. You're starting again—you want to keep people on their toes and hopefully Smith and Jones will do that."

David is called back along the corridor, to take his marks. "Doing is always about moving on and having to form relationships with people very quickly," he adds, with Doctor-like speed. "It would be difficult if Foreman was a nightmare, but she couldn't be lovelier."

Russell claims that he, Phil and Julie had no quick session with which to prepare Foreman for the on-set experience. "We wished her well," he says, "showed her into the medicine and diagnosed the doc! I'm so much on set that it's the one thing I wouldn't give her advice on. One people are like terms who grow up in a dark cupboard, they develop their own language and music. And again, I wouldn't pretend to understand! But and early, she's not being hurt in a set with David Tennant, who you just know will do everything to help and support her, so there were no worries."

BACK IN THAT TONE MEETING,

the team is discussing how they're taking to the wood to do the Royal Hope Hospital, internally. Like Kelly (John) from Sir Terry wants to know how confident Russell is about the flying open of medical cupboards, so he...

"Violence's good," says Russell. "I wanna see violent. The whole idea of this episode is to be real. No stages. Things smash and bang! This is a real medical unit!"

Russell's stark capstone is confirmed.

In a move which is sure to endear her to the Doctor Who fans, Foreman has made a special effort to introduce all her Doctors. She connects them to Jon Pertwee on the box, to give a little help with the old-time Doctor Who Agreement System. For Russell, "The Doctor" is this: "Hurry to bed! Because Da Becom—Nurse! Enquire! To Meds! The Doctor is of eachward reminds you of each Doctor's secret. I was understood."

"IT'S MAD, ALMOST IN REAL TIME... IT'S GOT A REALLY GOOD ENERGY!"

David Tennant as the Tenth Doctor, with Jenna Coleman as Clara Oswald.

David Tennant as the Tenth Doctor, with Jenna Coleman as Clara Oswald. David Tennant as the Tenth Doctor, with Jenna Coleman as Clara Oswald. David Tennant as the Tenth Doctor, with Jenna Coleman as Clara Oswald.

"No," she admits. "Beyond expectations, I get stuck."

"That's rubbish," he says. "We may have to fuse you."

Mere minutes later, David is back in the MRI Room, still spouting the Paddy's Palace and doing what he calls, "Tennant's stand-up setup. You end up by oversteering a bit."

He bows to Jenna across the room, and the lights between the red and blue wires, simultaneously removing the red. He cuts one take short. "Oh dear, the blue one's come out," he hoots. "That's the universe destroyed, that!"

By take four, Phil Collinson has requested less attitude lighting, mindful of broadcast sensitivities concerning epileptic scenes. "Fluorescent lights, it's a nightmare," he cautions.

Between takes, David wanders along the corridors in his position in respect of simultaneous set-up. Mr. Stoker's office. Greeting at Anne Reid, who plays pensive-puncturing penicillin: Florence Fung, he chirps. "How's it going in here? Have you asked Mr. Stoker's blood yet?"

No, I don't recall, floating on camera, smiling, Anne, dreamily. "Oh dear, that's a disappointing." David heads back to, in an arm on a powerfully removing the red wire, shortly before the next Stoker's Office scene is filmed. In this one, Florence enters the room, all swaggers and light, then is flanked by her two spiky monocle-couriers.

"Come in like a Shin," Charles "Jones the doctor" says. "Jones the doctor," says. "Jones the doctor," says. "Jones the doctor," says.

That's right," says the director. "Not like a voblo-Shin." "No, that's not," says Anne. "I don't think I can look at the camera with all these fucking dogs."

Charles agrees, across the scene's "page", then chuckles delightedly at Anne licking her lip during the takes. Incidentally, while the director declines to be formally interviewed by DWAM, it's for the most benign reasons: he's unreviewable. A shame, as he has clearly inherited his actor father Geoffrey Palmer's dry humour and funny hugs a couple of DWAM every time we see him. (Though we've since heard that Mr. Palmer has agreed to record a podcast commentary for his second Doctor Who episode, The Shakespeare Code. "It took days of bribery!" Russell tells us.)

Surely the prettiest creations to make Saturday night prime-time in years. ("You haven't lived, boy!" booms Russell, in response to this anecdotal, the fourth-fashined couriers are played by Matt Dorman and Mike Williams. The latter is especially pleased to be back in a Doctor Who monster outfit, following his turn as a Cyberman last year. "It's a big fan," he grins, "but I'm trying to be professional and keep it under wraps. The helmet helps."

"I'm all padded up inside," grins Matt. "But I don't mind if I'm on fire - this is the best thing in the world!"

FANTASTIC FACS

Still not sated with Smith and Jones info? Have some more!

A four-minute action sequence, snipped from an early Smith and Jones draft, saw the Doctor and Martha escaping the Judon by hijacking a window cleaner's crane, zooming down the side of Royal Hope, with Judon firing from above, the crane-wires snapping, then falling, Martha clinging on to a wire. "It got very Die Hard," says Russell. "Thrilling, it was! Then [script editor] Simon Winstone pointed out the script was about four minutes too long. Ah, obvious cut. Leaps of joy from Mel. Damn it all, I loved that crane. It was this year's HU! It came back to that, one day..."

Winstone's (left) has a couple of previous Doctor Who connections - she's a regular in The Last Detective with Peter Davison, for one thing. More obscurely, she appeared in a North-East Local Group Doctor Who fan movie called Hidden Face. "It wasn't bad, actually," she recalls, "considering I had no budget."

Russell never considered using Sontarans in this story, instead of the vaguely similar Judon. "They just ended up a bit Sontaranish," he says. "Sontaransque! Once you decide to helmet them, cos we could only have one anatomical head, then that was it. And the Slatas set the tone of this whole escapade."

Slatas and Flameworms and Judon alike all originating from some sort of Heavy Leather Galaxy - so the dark colours helped. Though Sontarans were never black leather, were they? Doesn't bother me though. Some species look like. Look how many different types of dog we've got!"

Anne Reid wanted to play Florence with a German accent. "I said, basically, am - no," admits Russell. "I thought it might be playing up the vampire side too much - and would reveal her as a villain from her very first line. Far enough, she said and then we moved on to the important stuff, the gossip. But she was brilliant, and David got on with her a treat. That scene, where she's sucking his blood with a straw - must've been 500 takes cos they were both laughing so much."

Kitach set-dressing for female characters drives Russell mad. He was determined for Martha to come across as "funny and sexy. I do think there's a problem on TV with cute, pink set-dressing for women. That's why we changed the colour of Rita's bedroom. The very first time you see in the whole series is a cuddly toy on her bed! Hate that bloody toy. But those were early days, and teething troubles, with the whole crew getting to know each other. Wouldn't happen now. Maybe I'm wrong anyway! Don't get me started on television set dressing for the middle classes, complete with grand pianos. But you will be seeing Martha's flat, her proper home, in Episode 6."

Before being fooled into auditions for Martha, Freeman had previously tried out for three different Doctor Who roles. Namely, Sally Jacobs in The Christmas Invasion ("I watched that episode," she says, "recognised those lines and the part I failed to get, and was gutted"). Then the Prisoner who was eventually deleted from Rise of the Cybermen and The Age of Steel ("A shame, as she was a wickedly elegant and I would've got to use a gun!") and of course Army of Ghosts. Adobo, the part she ultimately won.

Concept art for the TARDIS console.

▲ Concept art for the TARDIS console.

► The Joneses get ready to make their entrance.

► The pair close their visors, in readiness for a take. Walking by, Freeman reckons the co-stars are "this stuff of nightmares. It's always more creepy when you can't see the faces and your brain has to do the rest."

Matt slumps his foot for Freeman's benefit, wiggling his gloved fingers in a "jazz hands" style.

"Oh," she laughs. "That's not quite so scary now."

While they're stunt-doubled in scenes involving actual bike-riding, Matt and Mike do some sterling running in Smith and Jones – partly modeled on Robert Patrick's remorseless sprints in Terminator 2.

"It's very hard to do good running on a TV budget," admits Russell. "The actors always have to run at a speed that allows for the movement of the camera. In other words, the world can be ending, and they jog. So I specifically wrote that sequence to be like the circus-thin nagged and nagged poor Charlie. 'Make 'em run!' I said. And I think it works. It's the best running we've had so far."

Freeman's got slouch culture, as she charges at Stoker's office, with Florence's blood-curdling cry of "Kill her!" ringing in her ears. Instructed by Charles to slam Stoker's door behind her, Freeman inadvertently locks First AD Gareth inside the room.

"Right," laughs Phil, slapping his hands together. "That's lunch!"

W hat with Smith and Jones being (a) Doctor Who and (b) a particularly wild ride, the guest actors are loving it.

Ray Munnister, who plays Stoker, is absolutely transfixed by the show. For 10 minutes he sees Ray's favourite DWM about previous Doctors and Who history.

"David has a dynamic, quirky charm and a wonderfully quality of innocence," he praises, perched on a creaky chair outside. "That's very attractive in character. His energy drives the show. He's what I call an actor who really

"IT'S HARD TO DO GOOD RUNNING ON A TV BUDGET!"

CATCHING UP WITH THE JONESES

Meet Martha's Mater! Er, and Pater. And Siblings too...

TREVOR LAIRD

Plays: Clive Jones, Martha's dad.
Favourite pre-Who CV moment: "My first film, Quadrophenia, is still a favourite and was The Long Good Friday. I also enjoyed being in Doctor Who first time around, in Face of the Devil."

Abiding memory from Smith and Jones shoot: "The family bust up scene. All of us, singing in the back of the pub, having a laugh. The first time we'd been together as a family."

On Freeman: "She's great to work with. A really nice, natural girl."

Best thing about being in Doctor Who: "It really impresses my children. And they feel good, because it impresses their friends too!"

Favourite Clive line: "When Annalise walks off, 'I'm putting my foot down. This is me, putting my foot down!'"

Describe Clive in three words: "Can I have four? Square peg, round hole."
Freema on Trevor: "A real sweetheart and very funny. Great for spontaneous, light conversation – we can talk about anything from Bruce Willis to American jazz."

ADJOA ANDOH

Plays: Francine Jones, Martha's mum.

Favourite pre-Who CV moment: "Playing Condoleezza Rice at the National Theatre. A great part – I did lots of research. Especially on the hair!"

Abiding memory from Smith and Jones shoot: "Standing in the street and shouting a lot!"

On Freeman: "She's lovely and we laugh a lot. There's lots of African humour, knocking backwards and forwards."

Best thing about being in Doctor Who: "It's really happy show. And it gives me kudos at home, from my kids."

Favourite Francine line: "Yuffing at Annalise. 'Oh, like you've been watching the news, you can't handle Quintanilla!'"

Describe Francine in three words: "Driven. Family-loving. Emotional."

Freema on Adjoa: "You feel like she can teach you a lot. She's an amazingly experienced, accomplished actress, but also in terms of life. You want to tell her all your problems!"

hangs out the line, so everyone can come hang their washing on it."

(On being Mr. Stoker. Ray says, "I think it's important to play roles like that as real as possible, so that all the words make sense." He'd be very dry for the whole show to feel slightly jaded, with the scenes being longer than life. Stoker's very funny, though. I went to a private Hadley Street consulting the other day, and he was going into the room in exactly the same style as humorously. I couldn't make the first suggested appointment because I was filming here, but his secretary charged the date because this consultant fellow was a huge Acetate Why, how?") Did Roy enjoy being exsanguinated by Ann?

"Well, in the first 20 years of my acting life, I spent all my time dying," he smiles. "I became one of the great dieters in the business. Then I had a whole period of grief for another two decades whereby I never died. And now, once again, at the big end of my career, I'm back to dying. Having your blood sucked out with a syringe is truly bizarre. And yet the basic of it makes sense."

Ben Rightson, who plays excitable student Morgenstern, on the other hand, is happy that his character makes it out alive. "We can't rule out Morgenstern spin-offs!" by beams. "He starts off as a 'schoolroom gawk' and by the end he's the thinking woman's crumpet."

When Bert was but a boy, Doctor Who numbered among those shows he was allowed to watch. "I lived for that, Wagon and Diller. So this is one of my boxes ticked. Now I just need to be interviewed by Terry and get a part in the 'after-noon' movie."

"My little nephew is addicted to Doctor Who," he adds. "He doesn't believe that David Tennant is an actor. He's fairly convinced I'm really going to die in the moon, isn't I'm not sure whether to tell him or not! Maybe I'll wait til he finds out about Star Trek."

Awes, logic, poce! actress Vinteta Babi is crying! As DWM heads over to administer a hug, it imagines that she's playing Mamma's sappy main jolo and a method actress.

"It's really difficult when you have to do it repeatedly, for all the different angles," she says. "You have to keep in the zone." Which is a shame, because you keep getting people coming up to you, saying, "Are you all right?"

Juba's not the strongest of heroic role models, is she?

"No, she's not, although you never know how you'd react in this kind of ▲ Nice girl Martha Jones has her eyes opened to the actor's world.

▼ Hebrew (1700)
(Aramaic) is no an important as the world's most friends. I'm not, who'd expect to be taken to the airport? Just do, it's hardly things very well - she's strong. To be down. But she's friends with Menna, wasn't she the first bird. She does make up for her weeping, though, thanks to a change made to the end of the story.

 Originally she was just unconscious - then it was changed to her holding people out of the ward. I'm very glad!

We find a walking enigma among the supporting cast. His name is Gordon Sevier and he is portraying Mark Patient #4, a senior citizen, grandfatherly to have appeared in a Second Unit serial since 1967 or '68. Gordon recalls, "ramming through corridors and being scared to death," which sounds just about right, although his name doesn't appear on existing records. How accurate David's fascinated by Gordon's story. "I was debating with someone who had the longest gap between appearances," he says, "and Pauline Collins just pips Margaret John. But Gordon seems to beat them all!"

Gordon is similarly fascinated by Twilight. "It's always got the novel Twilight like a whipper. I'm not into science-fiction, though. I like a good, real story with real people."

BACK IN THAT TONE MEETING, the next major discussion is Mary's relationship with the Doctor's life.

REGGIE YATES

Plays: Leo Jones, Martha's brother

Favourite pre-Whe CV moment: "Oh, man! I Disasters's when I was seven it made me determined to act more—I was a fan of the show and couldn't believe it. They all gave me sweets, too!"

Abiding memory from Smith and Jones show: "The fear of the first scene. It's such a big show—my parents and their parents have watched it. You don't wanna be the only rabbi's character in its history!"

On freemasonry: "She's all right. She smells a bit funny, like cooked food. Boiled potatoes, mainly. No, she's lovely. And she has the same birthday as my actual sister Spook!"

Best thing about being in Doctor Who: "Knowing that the doctor and I suddenly think I'm not cool, because they love it."

Favourite Leo line: "Honestly, I couldn't tell you – it's a blur. I don't even know what I'm saying on-set today!"

Describe Leo in three words: "Young, Naive, Honest."

Freeman on Reggie: "Funny, real and interesting. He's one of those people you meet that you feel like you've known a long time. I'd say he reminds me of me, but he doesn't. He's better than me!"

GUGU MBATHA-RAW

Plays: Letitia 'Tish' Jones, Martha's sister.
Favorite one-who CV moment: "I really shoot: "Being incredibly over excited. I got hyper in the TARDIS!"

On Faizma: "It'd sound so cheesy to say she's like a sister, but she's lovely and a real, real struggle."

Best thing about being in Doctor Who: "The scripts. And everyone being so excited, when they Example Tie Line: "When someone says I've got a nice perfume on, and asks what it is. I say, "Knecht".

Describe Tish in three words: "Flirtatious, Ambitious. Hmmmm, I feel like I should find a redeeming quality."

Prema on Gugic: "She's older than me in this, but in real life I'm older, and I do just wanna give her a cuddle! She's genuinely happy and smiley. She's enjoying this — a great vibe to have around."

DUB BE GOOD TO ME

Ever wondered how much work goes into how Doctor Who actually sounds? Wonder no more...

ROYAL HOPE HOSPITAL PATIENT FILE

NINE O'CLOCK ON A February morning, and it's snowing in Cardiff. Airports have been closed, train services cancelled, schools shut, and some households are without power. "People who must travel," says the over-vigilant BBC News website, "are advised to take warm clothes, food, water, a torch, and a spade." Armed with all five, I arrive, cold and damp, at BBC Wales HQ. "You made it through the blizzard!" marvels Russell T Davies, lead writer and executive producer. "Welcome to D-Day."

Far from born to a dub before, this is my first dub. I'm a dub debutant, and I'm not sure what to expect. But Russell knows "Brand new Doctor Who," he enthuses. "What a laugh!" I leave my spade in the foyer (I was getting funny looks), and follow Russell, his fellow execs, Julie Gardner, and producer Phil Collinson down, down, down into the depths of BBC Wales. This will be the first time that any of them have watched Smith and Jones with finished visuals, effects, grading, and Murray Gold's score. "Before now," says Russell, "we've had to watch it with no music, or with stock tracks from movies laid over it."

In the dub theatre, I'm introduced to director Charles Palmer, and sound mixer Tim Ricketts ("Ricketts Tim, we call him"), the unsung hero of Doctor Who. This is where he lives. I think. There are no windows. We could be miles underground. But there are leather sofas, chocolate biscuits, a big screen on the wall ("like the cinema," Russell grins), although more cramped, and Webster's, and a desk sporting as many laptops, disks, and switches as your average TARDIS console.

notes. "I hate Martha's ringtone," complains Russell. "It's too fancy. Can't we just have a 'ring ring'?" "The static clearly changes," says Julie. "I find a little bit too science-fiction. More organic, please. They're too much."

"When Florence says 'I'll them,'" Phil points out, "it's muffled."

Tim shrugs. "She's talking with her mouth full."

"Too slow," says Julie, with regards to the scene of the Doctor and Martha running from the Slabs. "It should be the best running sequence ever!"

"We need to pick up the rhythm," agrees Charles.

Russell is worried that Murray's music for the chase is too leisurely. "We need a drum," he muses.

A major talking point is the Judeon speeches. "Dear God, Tim," exclaims Julie, "what were you doing to us there? How loud were they?"

Russell, ignoring the fact that they're in supposedly silent space! They're using — erm — Vacuum Resonance Broadcast empires, didn't you know?"

"We get into our usual fight," says Julie, "between music and sound effects. The three-year fight."

"Louder! Louder!" cheers Phil, munching on a biscuit. "Can you push the music? I want you to burst my eardrums. Sound effects and music lighting — brilliant!"

Russell nods. "Try channel-hopping on a Saturday night. We're a drama competing with the sheer noise of light entertainment shows. We've got to match them. Audiences will stay with the louder show."

▲ The Judeon got ready for some top-scoring yomping...

▼ What does blood being sucked through a stone sound like...

words. "You worked on that camera shake for hours, I know. But do you know what? You were wrong."

"Fair enough," smiles the director, graciously. (Russell changes his mind a few days later, knowing how hard Charles worked on the scene. He's a softy, really.)

"When the hospital reappears," says Julie, "we want to lose the reaction shot of the crowd. I think."

Russell concurs. "We stay on the extras a second too long."

"It's not the best shot, is it?" says Charles. "Should we cut it?"

Russell is unsure about the closing shot of the Doctor and Martha shaking hands across the TARDIS console. "It goes on a bit. It's a bit staged."

"Nope!" protest Julie and Phil. They adore that shot.

"Glow, fine," shrugs Russell, looking up his hands, "keep it."

As we venture back up to ground level, stopping off in the foyer to collect our showers, Russell tells me that he "absolutely loved" the — very almost — complete Smith and Jones. "Lots of things were a surprise," he admits. "I didn't know that the Judeon were going to make that hip-two-three really knits everything together, doesn't it?" The whale episode has likewise unfolded up to this point, and finally it's all become a cohesive whole.

BENJAMIN COOK

"WE GET INTO OUR THREE-YEAR FIGHT BETWEEN MUSIC AND SOUND-EFFECTS!"

"The sounds of each episode," explains Russell, "last on separate tracks — one track music, one track footsteps, one track crowd noise, one track sonic screwdriver, and so on. God knows how many different tracks there are. It's Tim's job to mix all of the tracks, to decide how loud and how prominent each track should be. I've worked with dozens of award-winning sound mixers over the years, and Tim is absolutely the best. He centres so much of the show's atmosphere. The growl of the TARDIS interior, the Cybernet's march — he got tickets off Kylie Minogue when she used that sound in her concert! — and the level of the Judeon's yomping... that all belongs to Tim."

WE SETTLE INTO THE SOFAS, AND watch Smith and Jones. "That was gorgeous," cheers Russell, as the credits roll. "I could give you a genetic transfer!"

"That last scene," waxes Julie, "is so moving."

"Four speeches made a difference!" Charles grins. "I love that line."

But there are notes. There are always

Tim. "When the Doctor kisses Martha, does the music comes in a bit late? The strings should come in as their lips touch."

Russell. "When the Judeon fire at the Doctor and Martha, could we have a changing up noise? They take a lucky three seconds to fire! Well, that noise would explain it to me."

What about the camera shake added to the shots of the spaceships leaving the Moon? "It's terrible," insists Russell. "It's ruining them."

Charles spent ages on those shakes. "It helps the scale of it," he argues.

"It saves the scale," Julie replies wistfully. A dub, it seems, is no piece to mimic your ▲ "Run!" Better get used to it, Martha...

► Freema gets to the end of her first sketches—and she's still smiling, thank goodness!

▼ Her department sketches for the Doctor's company.

◀ give her more than a few bumps and bruises. It's only after I'd thought of it, that I start to make connections—the oh-ho-ho I'm-a-Doctor connection is almost bear avoided; it's obvious. We really don't say it is official."

Is a Doctor/companion smog now compulsory in every opening episode? "While I have breath in my lungs! No, I just thought it would be a laugh, that's all! I bet this gets a headline in a tabloid near transmission. It's Scots Three: those headlines will do nicely, thank you very much!"

Back on set, David and Freema are about to perform that old-timey smooch. They're in a corridor which has been dressed to look wrecked. Strip lights hang from the ceiling, loose and scraggy. Rory Marshak walks into one, bumping

He's working, but the Judge's actions, trying to find the hidden sin, kicking himself for leaving the TARDIS on Earth, trying to save his own skin, and undoubtedly trying to impress Martha, all at the same time, so his mouth comes out with gibberish. I love that."

"There's still a little too much Freema in frame," says Charles.

"Surely," she laughs, "I just can't help myself. I see a camera! It's right there!"

At the end of one take, as the pair run out of the station, Freema gets entangled on an IV drip stand, which clatters to the ground. You feel for her, as sample mistakes like this must feel magnified on your first day, but she laughs and remains undaunted. One swift pick-up later, the shot is brought. David celebrates by leaping onto the nurse's station—God knows where he'd found that last source of energy—and giving Freema a hug.

Doctor Who's new companion sits in a long corridor outside, relaxing a day. How does she feel?

"Still pumped with adrenaline. Just but buzzing. I know that when I get home I'm going to crash, but it's already been amazing. Doctor is a cool-headed and generous as actor as I, or anybody, could have the fantasy of working with."

good for the bottom of it, it's fun. People seem to worry over going from killing to saving, in the way that modern Doctor Whosians, for certain people, in being simply a source of constant worry and nothing more. But I remember, when I was young, going from Jo to Sarah Jane, from being a girl to a girl—I loved it! It always felt like the show was moving on, in leaps and bounds. We were lucky with Freema, in that she came on to our radar almost by chance. Even then, the audition process was a daunting, but she just had the right energy, that optimism and determination and sense of humor that sums up everything that Doctor Who is trying to achieve."

Not bad for a young lady two days into her new job, eh? So how well does Freema Agyeman think she did today?

"From my perspective it was great, but I'm biased!" she grins. "Nah, you just hope that you've done the best you can. I'm happy!"

She heads off along the corridor, that laugh bouncing around the walls.

"FREEMA AND DAVID GET ON REALLY WELL... THERE'S CHEMISTRY ALREADY!"

his head. "Comedy," he chuckles.

To gauge the crew during rehearsal Freema performs an exaggerated swoon, falling back into David's arms. Now there's trust.

It's late afternoon and snacks are being offered to maximize energy levels.

"What's that one?" asks David, pointing at a sandwich on a tray. It's pepperoni.

"That's what I hoped it was," he says, grinning mischievously.

"Ready to give Freema a nice kiss, David?" laughs Gareth Williams. "Can we have two goats sandwiches, please?"

The last scene captured on Freema's first day sees Martha and the Doctor in a nurse's station. It's long and dialogue-intensive—especially for David, who has to deliver exposition at break-neck speed.

When Russell writes lines like "Judith glances upon the moon," included in this scene, does he rub hands gleefully at the thought of David wrapping his nimble voice-box around them?

"Honestly, you might not believe it, but I'm not thinking of David when I'm writing that stuff, I'm thinking of the Doctor. Honestly! I like how he plays with words while his mind is thinking of something else, and fast."

"Straight away, I was a little bit in awe," she confesses. "I'm glad that we did a few scenes without him yesterday to give me a chance to be calm on set. Having said that, there was a moment today, when I looked at him and had to do a double-take. He's amazing."

He's so good at what he does, equally near. Being in a scene with him, I had myself watching him like a sewer, then remembering that I usually have to interact with him and say lines!"

"As the Doctor and companion roles are so important, you hope it won't take very long for them to bond as actors," says a delighted Phil. "Remember your life so much easier! So I'm amazed at how quickly Freema has settled in."

"We're worked hard to make this a comfortable place to come, and she's responded to that. She and David get on really well already and that's a great start. It seems to fit very well of chemistry there, so I'm thrilled. I'm also pleased that it's not hard to fish her out of any nightclubs in the middle of the night, hello!" jokes.

Russell describes Freema's enthusiasm as "a breath of fresh air. It's good for the show, it's

BROADCAST
Saturday 7 April, BBC One

WRITER
Gareth Roberts

DIRECTOR
Charles Palmer

STARRING
David Tennant, Freema Agyeman,
Dean Cain, Kelly, Chlöe Cole,
Amanda Lawrence, Linda Clark,
Jasal Hartley, David Westhead

IN A NUTSHELL
Martha's first trip in the TARDIS takes her to Elizabethan England — and an audience with the one and only William Shakespeare!
But someone is plotting to sabotage the Bard's latest work. When the Master of the Revels is horribly murdered, the Doctor suspects witchcraft...

But black magic isn't real... is it? Double, double, toil and trouble...

QUOTE, UNQUOTE
THE DOCTOR: There's something I'm missing, Martha. Something really close, staring me right in the face, and I can't see it.

TV PREVIEW

EPISODE 2:

THE SHAKESPEARE CODE

"I'M A BIG FAN OF SHAKESPEARE," Gareth Roberts enthuses, "but I'm afraid I spit on Dan Brown! The episode title is playful, and that's as far as the Brown connection goes. I hate conspiracy theories. Right from the off, the inspiration for The Shakespeare Code was words — the power of writing to stir people, change their perspective, perhaps change the world..."

Although Gareth scripted the recent Sam Jones Adventures special, Invasion of the Bane, The Shakespeare Code is his first contribution to actual, proper Doctor Who on the telly — and blimey, it's about time! With Christmas 2005's interactive episode, Attack of the Grask, and last year's 'Tardisodes' to his credit, as well as novels, audio dramas, and, of course, DWM comic strips, Gareth isn't exactly a Doctor Who virgin. ("I've been watching it since 1972," he points out, "and criticising it since 1973!"), and The Shakespeare Code bears the kind of exuberance, dynamism, and relentless energy that comes with knowing that you're finally writing the script that you've spent three-and-a-half decades itching to write. And it's brilliant.

Following The Unequal Dead back in 2005, and Tooth and Claw and The Girl in the Fireplace in 2006, The Shakespeare Code is what showrunner Russell T Davies describes as the 'celebrity historical.' Ex-Shameless star Dean Cain's Kelly is this historical's celebrity catch, and offers a surprisingly restrained but powerful performance as the Bard. "I like that he's very still, and very cool," states Gareth, "and effortlessly sexy. It makes a nice contrast with the Doctor, who's always running and talking, and doesn't realise that he might be attractive to people — not even Martha. And it's great fun to see how Shakespeare interacts with the Doctor. They're both geniuses — it felt like writing a 'two Doctors' story sometimes..."

Tudor London provides a stunning backdrop for the action. "We took a couple of historical liberties," explains Gareth, "but I think it's okay to alter things slightly if it helps your story."

How did Gareth approach writing his first fully-fledged TV episode of Doctor Who? "I guess I just... did it. In fact I can't remember. I'm hopeless, aren't I? Verity Lambert can reel off what happened on the set of The Rescue 40 odd years ago, and here's me in a fog about last May..."

The script boasts some deliciously witty exchanges between the three lead characters; take the Doctor's banter with Will, or his response to Martha's fears of changing history by, for instance, stepping on a butterfly or killing her grandfather.

The crew spent several days filming in and around the modern reconstruction of the Globe Theatre on London's Bankside, and the visual effects team has recreated the look and feel of London's streets from 400-odd years ago with filming in Coventry and Warwick. The finished effect will — and it's a DWM guarantee that! — blow you away. "The script had an epic quality from the first draft," says Gareth, "and the production's done me proud. Director Charles Palmer is my new god!"

Gareth's not wrong — The Shakespeare Code is, even by the standards the new series has set so far, huge. Sets, locations, CGI and prosthetics combine from the very first moment to provide something really special — and just when you think it can't get any bigger...

BENJAMIN COOK <#>

Visually it's set in the same universe as The Satan Pit... grimy and sweaty!

Chris
Chibnall

INTERVIEW BY DAVID DARLINGTON

 kag, I'm a Doctor Who fan – I'm an expert at seeing patterns that aren't there. But it does seem to me that there's a pattern emerging with the new writers who've been brought into Doctor Who this year – they all seem to have a lot of theatre experience and to have moved sideways into telly. The problem is, I can't work out if there's any real significance to that – and anyway, as Chris Chibnall points out straight away, "There is no such a thing as a standard 'rising career' anyway."

Chris Chibnall: Even if you do a degree in scriptwriting, you're still going to spend years earning money elsewhere before you end up writing full time.

I spent pretty much all of my twenties doing a variety of jobs, and it was when I was about 30 that I got the first paid writing job. But throughout my twenties I was doing all these different jobs and writing at evenings and weekends. It's a test of how much you want to do it – you're devoting a lot of time to it when you could be out, having a social life.

When was said just one of a lot of your spare time as they pass out of things, were you working too?

Theatre work. My first 'play' was a 45-minute piece I wrote when I was eighteen. I submitted it as part of Contact Theatre in Manchester, who ran a young playwrights festival in 1988. That was the first time I'd been in a rehearsal room with actors and a director, and once you've been in a rehearsal room, you're infected forever. There's something addictive about it.

Was there anything from that period, the way you'd work? I mean, you'd be going to be there?

I liked being there anyway. I always thought maybe I would be a theatre director – though I went through my teens thinking I might be a journalist, because I did a lot of writing. Pamphlet articles, stuff like that.

the realisation you were quite an active science fiction fan? As a former life 'Whit' (which I once described as 'an active participant' rather than just a viewer)?

Well, it was just the show I most loved on TV. My first memory is, literally, of Doctor Who, of The Sea Devils, and I can't have been more than two or three when that was on. The show kind of 'got into' me – and I see it now, with my son, who'll be four this year. I see it taking him over in the most fantastic beautiful way, firing his imagination. So I always followed it, bought the Doctor Who Weekly comic [which eventually became the DWM you now hold in your hand] and when Doctor Who was taken off-air in 1985, I was like, 'Where do I get my fix? Eighteen months – that's forever!' I started going to these local group meetings which were extraordinary... 40 people sitting in a darkened hotel room watching a really flickery copy of The Celestial Toymaker Episode 4. But because there were so few videos back then, it was incredible to see all those things you'd only seen pictures of in that old 1973 Radio Times Tenth Anniversary Special. Between about 1985 and 1988 I was part of all that – but when I went to college in London to do drama, I fell out of it, and drama and theatre took over. Looking back now, I can trace the pattern, the love of drama and of television that Doctor Who gave me. Doctor Who came first, then a love of television, which then spreads into all the other things you watch. I did a BA in Drama and English, at St Mary's College in Twickenham. It was a great course, brilliantly taught, and I met a lot of very good friends, and after that, there was no going back in terms of the sphere in which I wanted to work.

It took a while to take it on your own, though.

I worked for Sky for a while, logging tapes of Italian football matches into their computer system. It was a million miles from where I'd been – suddenly I'm a football archivist at Sky, where a year previously I'd been at a pub theatre in Richmond playing the lead in Martin Sherman's Benf! It was a career in the old-fashioned meaning of the word, meaning 'to go all over the place'. I did that for about two years, but I'd graduated from college thinking I was going to work in theatre or whatever, and ended up doing a job about football. I was working in TV, but it was completely the wrong bit, which is almost worse than not being there at all – how would I ever get from working there to working in, say, drama at the BBC, which is what I wanted?

A friend kind of like a brainiac script?

Very much. So I did an MA in Theatre & Film at Sheffield University for a year, which was great – again, I met a lot of good people, and living in Sheffield was brilliant, it's an amazing place to be a student. After this I got a job at DGM productions, who specialised in touring theatre shows such as compilation musicals. So you'd do a 60s show called Tieat and Shout, which would have a threadbare script, and a brilliant band, and 40 songs from the 1960s. There was always a story in there – just about! It's easy to be cynical, but you put that show on stage, with a couple of old pros who knew stagecraft, and every night it got a standing ovation. To tailor a show for a mainstream audience who are going to be paying 25 quid, you've really got to hit the mark. I stayed two or three years there, and we did a couple of those – and I wrote the script for a 1950s one called, Tutti Frutti... and it was awful!

Did I write previous 'hunch' of songs and to be working there, didn't they?

Yes, basically! I played Edinburg, and the review – a damning review, which I still have framed – said 'The cast perform the script like it was written in capital letters – as a probably was.'

And I thought 'hang on rights! You can never get angry about a review like that, you can't think you're being misinterpreted, you just think, yep – it's a fair cop!

Presumably though you were acting before that?

Well, let's wait and see! In the evenings and weekends all through Sky and DGM, I was writing, and I got a play accepted by a fringe theatre, a room above a pub in Hampton Wick. It was about three college mates who meet up every year for a reunion. The guy who ran the theatre company, Grip, rang me up and said "Not only is this great, but we can do it! All the other plays I've got set in forests with 97-year-old wardens, and I can't do that in a room above a pub!" I became their writer in residence, wrote another two short plays that year, and got very involved with the running of the theatre.

That was where I learned stagecraft – because I would write a play, and it would be on four weeks later, and I would go along every night to see what worked and what didn't, and hone it and hone it. It was amazing – you learn about jokes, about getting characters in and out of scenes... I'm very interested in that, I'm not a writer who sits in a corner writing the dark, dark piece. As well as saying the things you want to say, you have to entertain people – and that's where I learned some ▲ Top: The Doctor and his new best friend get ready for new adventures...

▲ Above: Writer Chris Chibnall
Photo © David Darlington

◀ aspects of it. The third play I wrote for them was called Gaffer, which was a one-man show about a football manager. DGM had got Tommy Docherty and Malcolm Allison together for a show – the sort of show you could do out of the back of a Mini, essentially! – so I spent a lot of time with these two extraordinary characters, and I couldn't get their voices out of my head. To exercise that, I wrote a monologue about an old-time football manager who is struggling with the modern game. At the end of the first half, he's kissed by the young striker – so the whole second half was about 'Is he gay?', in the homophobic world of football. One actor played all the parts – it was quite theatrical, and one of the pieces I'm most proud of.

Through writing Gaffer I got an agent, who asked what I wanted to do and where I saw myself, and I said I'd really like to have a crack at TV – so I started getting meetings with TV people, and it sort of escalated from there. I did an episode of the Crossroads revival, before it went mad, and that was my first credit that went out. Carlton used to run a screenwriting course for up-and-coming writers. They'd take ten writers every year – Rob Shearman [writer of Dunk] did this course a couple of years after me. So I did that, and off the back of that and Gaffer, they approached me to do one of this series of four monologues. Mine was about a tube driver called Stormie Norman, on his last day at work. It was amazing – a very positive experience, because TV can be bruising for a writer.

So how did you get from there to dressing Born and Bred? It seems to have happened very quickly that you got your own show. Yes – madness, really! I'd just started working with Diedrick Santer, who's now executive producer on EastEnders. He was working at Granada, and they had this idea on the shelf from a guy called Nigel McCrory. Nigel is an ex-copper and now he comes up with ideas for shows – he'd been behind Silent Witness, and New Tricks is one of his too – and he'd had this idea for a Sunday night show. It needed an overhaul and proper working out, but it 'had something'. The BBC eventually commissioned it as Born and Bred, and nobody was more surprised than me, to suddenly have a Sunday night 8 o'clock show that I was writing and had co-created. It was a shock – particularly coming from theatre, because I finished Episode 1, and thought "Oh God – there are six episodes! What do I do in Episode 2?" I'd never returned to anything like that. You don't, in theatre! I'm proud of that show for a number of reasons, one of which is that I think it's very hard to create those shows – it has to be mainstream and it has to be enjoyable, and I think that's what's beautiful about the work that Russell does, it's hugely entertaining as well as having lots to say and being very bold. Born and Bred taught me pace of storytelling – and that it's a miracle that any television gets to the screen. There are so many things that can go wrong, or just be 1% off. That one costume, that one hat on that one person can ruin that scene, or the wrong person in the background in that scene, or the pacing of the edit, or the score, or three wrong lines of dialogue at the start of the episode... before you even think about rain on location or not having enough outside shots or not enough time to do the interiors, there are so many things that can go wrong. And when you get to Doctor Who and Torchwood, you can add in special effects and prosthetics as well!

▶ Top: Gwyneth Cooper (Eve Myles) in Torchwood.

▶ Above: Claire Dwyer BBC One's Born and Bred.

◀ Emotional decisions for the Torchwood team as Claire Dwyer's Cydonia comes.

As well as writing, you were head writer in charge of other writers contributing scripts. What did you learn from that? How long have you got? [laughs] You learn how other writers work, how to tell stories across multiple episodes, how to seed stories in other people's episodes... it's about how you communicate a vision of a show, how you get everybody writing the same thing. With Born and Bred it was tricky, because the differences between that show and other shows of the same genre weren't enormous, but they were significant. We did some very surreal comedy, some very odd stories – but you also wanted a really emotional story at the centre. And it was quite difficult, particularly in the first year, to communicate that to people who had worked on or seen those other shows in the same genre. We wanted to be a bit other and a bit more fun. The thing about leading other writers is that it's about being supportive and encouraging – just about being there, really. To talk about how to execute ideas, hopefully to become a team. It's a tricky thing.

So how did the Torchwood job come about? It must have been a busy year.

Oh, 2006 was a year of pain! One Life on Mars [see boxout], four Torchwoods and one Doctor Who, plus a script for Kudos on a different project, which is awaiting a second draft. And we moved house and had our second baby. It was a busy year! I'd worked with Julie before – we'd done a development project together years and years back when she was a producer under Mal Young – and kept in touch. We met up in August 2005, and she told me she was working on this post-watershed spin-off of Doctor Who with Captain Jack. Did I want to do it? Yeah! But I wasn't available – though she said not to worry about that, classic Julie! At that stage it was just an offer to do one episode, but knowing it was a series of 13, I said if they needed me to do more, they should use me as much as they needed to. And so a couple of months later she rang up and said "Well... do you want to be the lead writer, and do four episodes?"

How much of the format of Torchwood had been established before you came on to it? Was it just Captain Jack?

The 'format' was a page and a half of Russell's pitch, and they weren't even called Torchwood in that, actually. The point where we knew what the show actually was, was when Russell's first script came in. And then we all had a mad dash! What appealed to me was that 'un-knowability' of it – that it wasn't like anything else on TV. That's the sort of show you want to be on board. It's scary, and scary is exciting. Scary is the place you want to be. We talked at the very first story meeting about whether it would be more serialised than Doctor Who or whether there would be a 'case' every week – if it were serialised it would be cheaper and slightly easier to do, whereas if it was standalone 'case of the week' with a new alien or alien device, that was going to be much harder. And everybody said "story of the week!" You've got to go for the big targets. We rarely reference Doctor Who in our discussions – the key thing was that it had to be its own thing. It was clear from the start what the parameters and objectives for Torchwood were: that it was post-watershed, BBC Three – there was no confirmation at that stage of any serialised broadcast. There were words in Russell's original pitch document like 'wild' and 'dark' and 'sexy', and it's all those things. We were all conscious of finding an identity for the show which wasn't in relation to Doctor Who. The really great spin-off shows don't necessarily share many aspects of the original – look at Fraser and Chivers. As shows they're very different, but equally brilliant. So you're not necessarily going for the same audience...

▲ Captain Jack Harkness (John Barrowman) leads the team in Torchwood

▼ Chibnall has also written episodes of BBC One's time-travelling sitcom Life on Mars

And presumably that just comes from people following their instincts. All you do as a writer or producer is follow the things that interest you. And sometimes you're in a cold sea, and sometimes it's a huge big open road ▶

It was un-turn-downable!

As a writer, you can get typewritten to study as an actor, and I was conscious of that. I'd just started working with Kudos Productions on a development project, and then they rang me and said "We've got this show that's been green lit, it's a bit odd – would you like to do an episode?" In the meantime,

I'd been turning down work on a lot of 'real good' family dramas, because I didn't really want to be doing that forever – I'd done 17 episodes of Born and Bred, and there's only so much you can say in that genre. So with Life on Mars they said "Just read this script," which was Episode 1 that Matthew Graham had written. And it was the most incredible script, it was bold and confident and funny, everything you'd ever want. I thought, "I can't not write that!" – but I spoke to the producer, and said I didn't think I could make it work in terms of time scale. And her response was to mention John Simon and Philip Glenister. Okay I'd do it! It was 'un-turn-downable'. Kudos is a delight to work with, it's a brilliant, supportive creative team.

Yes, and they gave me completely free reign – they said "Go for it, we'll pull you back if necessary." They had a belief in what they were doing, and they were going to push it as far as they could. They weren't going to fall through being cautious! And you always want to work with those people – it's the same as working with Russell, and Julie Gardner. You go as far as you can with it and you don't hold back, you don't not commit yourself for fear that you might get it slightly wrong. And I think that's an ethos that spreads across Life on Mars, Doctor Who, Torchwood – you go for broke, and that makes it very exciting TV. So I did an episode for Series Two of Life on Mars as well!

◀ that you think you could drive down forever. You discover things by doing them – there's very little sitting around theorising about it. Get out there and try at Might work, might not, we'll think about that afterwards – but get your hands dirty and do it!

And how are you developing Torchwood for its second year? Any changes in format or tone as it's going straight to BBC Two? No, it's the same show. We had the audience research in the other work, and the response we had from the mainstream audience was phenomenal. Obviously there are some things we can do better, some things we've learned – but that's what happens between a first and second series. And also we know what the show is this year. The first year on Torchwood was phenomenal – Russell delivered his first script in January, and we were on air in October with a run of 13 episodes. It's the fastest turnaround I've ever known. I wrote my second Life on Mars before I started on Torchwood, and that was broadcast in February this year, months after the whole of Torchwood! So there was a fantastic energy to the first series of Torchwood, and it's been a huge hit. I'm aware that it's controversial in some ways, but I like that, and on any objective level, it's an important show to the BBC. The ratings are extraordinary.

So, you've now moved sideways – and contributed a script to Doctor Who?

▲ Rose rebounded. Chris' love affair with Doctor Who...

▼ The Torchwood Doctor, incarnations

...? What happened last year that four spin-offs of Torchwood, plus supervisory duties, wasn't enough to contend with? I got asked! When I started on Torchwood, Julie said "Maybe you'd like to do an episode of Series Four of Doctor Who!" But then, in July last year, I got a text from her saying "Can you give me a call? It's nothing bad..." So I rang her up, and she asked if I wanted to do a Doctor Who this year. And I think I surprised her by saying "Can I think about it?" – because it was becoming clear what a tough schedule Torchwood was on. In production terms it was an ambitious show for its budget and its schedule, and I was right in the middle of that. But at the back of your mind, you're thinking that you can't do Doctor Who – it's a brilliant show. I was at a tone meeting for another block of Torchwood, and across the room Julie mimed typing at me and mouthed the words "Doctor Who". And I said "Yeah, alright!" So Julie, Russell and I had a meeting in the car park, and I said I didn't know how I was going to be able to do it, what with my schedule. Julie said "Oh, you'll be fine." And as Russell has said, Julie could sell snow to blindfolded! That Russell and Julie, and the Kudos people, are producing the best shows on television at the moment. There's lots of great stuff out there, it's a great time to be working in TV drama – and they're right at the pinnacle, and a joy to work with. And also, I wanted to write for David Tennant. He's the best Doctor in the world, for me – I couldn't turn down the opportunity to write for him, I think he's magnificent. So it's all these things combined. And when you take on the job, the first feeling you get is fear. Fear and terror! Never mind that there are forty-whatever years of the show – the benchmark is high, you've got to be up to the standards, and that's terrifying. You hope you can do something exciting.

Write to reply...

You do things when you're 15, 16 – I got a phone call one Sunday night, asking "Do you want to come on the telly tomorrow to talk about Doctor Who?" All I really thought was, "A morning off school – fantastic!" There was no agenda, it was completely catch-and-release. [Writes] Pip and Jane Baker were there via a link to some other studio, and [producer] John Nelson-Turner was on the phone. I think I haven't seen it for 20 years! What's weird is sitting here talking about it, something that was just one morning when I was 16, and bears no significance on my life other than that people now come up to me and say things. I went to the Children in Need concert in Cardiff last year, and someone came up and said "I like your glasses now – they're better than the ones you had in '85!" When you're a 16-year-old, you're opinionated and moody, and if somebody asks you something, you're not going to be humored. I can't believe people have still got videos of...

Yes, I guess so. Oh God! But the chances of me sitting here talking to you now as a Doctor Who writer, 20 years later, were minuscule. That was never going to happen!

No, but that would have been fair enough – if I'm a fair target! I saw that Open Air about a year later and thought that on TV it came across much more vocally than it felt in the studio, and Pip and Jane reacted badly to it – I hit them. But I was struggling for words, and things came out that in retrospect weren't the most polite words. But we did correspond about a year later, and I apologized for being rude and they accepted that. So it ended on good terms, which a lot of people wouldn't know...

I guess watching Rose must have been the first time you'd thought about Doctor Who in quite a long time. How did you react to that, given that you'd once been so close to the show?

I was blown away by the skillful creation of a new version that kept all the things I loved about the series, with a modern sensibility and an emotional core. It's tricky going back and watching old episodes now, because emotionally there's not as much there. There's some terrific, amazing stuff, but it's a very different beast. What they managed to do on the show is extrapolate all the good bits, and lose all the bits that, as a fan, you tried to forget about anyway! Russell knew which bits to love, and which bits weren't necessary or useful for a mainstream audience. It felt so right so quickly that by the time you got to something like Episode 3, you thought, "How has this show ever not been there?" And now it's what you do at Christmas – Christmas Day, 7 o'clock, you watch Doctor Who. That's insane! Four years ago, it was nowhere! So I watched as a delighted viewer. And I can watch it with my wife now. I can watch Doctor Who with a girl! Hoorsy!

That really hasn't happened in 1986. Gareth Roberts said something interesting, which is that even when Tom Baker was as big as his height, Doctor Who wasn't the huge popular cultural success that it is now. It was a great show that everybody loved, but now it has an impact beyond the TV show. Everybody adores it, everybody loves David, the toys are selling millions, there are two spin-off shows... in 1986, you were watching a show that really had no place in public affection whatsoever, it was regarded with disdain. Whatever your opinions of that season – and I think there were great things about that season, don't get me wrong – you could not admit to being a Doctor Who fan in 1986. Which is why it was doubly idiotic of me to go on television as a Doctor Who fan! [screams] At 16 you shouldn't be in a television studio talking about Doctor Who – you should be out getting drunk! Thank God for college...

David Tennant: I was actually in the same position in 2005 when the show came back. That's completely different. At the time of Torchwood, which other shows had to be and to become a success, had some kind of a spin-off success – definitely more than any other series was doing?

Not really – I was used to working with Russell and Julie anyway, so I knew they were going to be supportive. But no, you always know there are certain guidelines and parameters within which you have to fit. Russell came in and said "These are the things you need – set it here, I want a bit of this, that and this." I think Helen Raynor called it a shopping list. And then it's your job to go away and put it together with a coherent shape – to make sense of that shopping list. That's hard.

Chris Chibnall: I think it's a bit of a shame that we have a reputation for being a bit of a shopping list. But you know what?

Yes, that's true. It's very often your job as a series television, and we do it to other people on Torchwood. As a lead writer, I have a responsibility to do a lot of the 'heavy lifting' – the beats for the regulars, the movement of their journey across the series. But whether you give yourself those shopping lists or whether someone else hands them to you, it's still the thing that will have you crying at 1am, sobbing "I can't do this." Crying at 1am is part of the job, it really is! Searing at the computer, and thinking it's impossible to put all these things together, is absolutely part of the job. Possibly more so on Doctor Who and Torchwood, because they are twice as difficult as other shows – you've got to have a creative, big concept sci-fi story, then add action, then find some emotional core to it. You don't get away with anything on these shows, they're very exposing, and on some of the episodes of Torchwood I think I was still learning. We really wanted Torchwood to be a multitude of things – right from the start people were saying "It's not what I thought it was going to be," as if that's a bad thing. I think that's a great thing, even if it means it takes people longer to get used to you. Also, with 13 episodes you've got to keep it fresh – it's a very, very long run. Life on Mars, in total, will be 16 episodes – that's the show finished, which is a really good decision. Torchwood's run will be at least 26, so we've got to keep those things ticking, we've got to surprise people.

You mentioned longevity there – no you mean longevity in terms of a long run of episodes, or in the minds of the viewers?

Well, look, actually – the format of Torchwood is designed that it could run and run, if that's what we all creatively decide and it's what the channels want, but you can never take that for granted. But they're commissioning it for 13-episode runs, and very few series get that. So it's already a long runner just by getting to Series Two, frankly!

▲ The Doctor and Donna in the second of our hopes many Doctor Who Christmas Day specials!

▼ Chris Chibnall
Photo © David Dickinson

What was on your shopping list that you'd be able to talk to me about?

Well, I kind of like the fact that nobody knows anything at the moment! I liked it with Fear Her last year, that nobody knew what it was about until it happened. So I'm slightly reluctant to say...

Well, let's examine what we know – it's called 42, which perhaps suggests two possibilities – one is that it's an homage to Douglas Adams, and the other is that it's an homage to 24 and takes place in real time. Any validty to either of those notions? ▶

◀ Yes! That's the joke of the title – 'is it something to do with the meaning of life?' It's a playful title, it's very different to the stories either side of it. In his DWM column Russell has pointed out that it's not set on Earth, although two of the words he mentioned in Production Notes that are supposedly in my script have actually been cut from subsequent drafts! At the very first conversation, Russell had suggested a different story idea, and then there was a gap after that conversation where I had to go away and write Episode 13 of Torchwood, and when I came back it had turned into a different episode. I think the first idea would have been twice as expensive – although I'm sure they'll do it in Series Four! Visually, the episode is set in the same universe as The Satan Pit – if you swivel the camera round from the rock those episodes are set on and look halfway across the galaxy, that's sort of where mine is. Very industrial, grumpy, sweaty, people working hard for a living...

And how did you find dealing with the new companion, Martha? Were you involved in development discussions, or given a set of scripts and told to get on with it?

Again, you just tend to work off what's already there. Fans do have this vision that people sit around and discuss aspects like that, you know, "I'm going to give you 17 bullet points about Martha's personality" – but you get on and do it, and then you see if you've got it right. So I read all the scripts that were ready. And just like if you read the script of Rose, you know who Rose is, and the same is true of Martha in Smith and Jones this time. You can see the differences between her and Rose, and the similarities, and what role she performs in the show. As ever, when you're writing, you want to give her something juicy to get her teeth into. Part of the brief was to give Martha a lot to do – you want to keep the companion active, give her something to do. She does have a dramatic life of her own, too, not just in relation to the Doctor – although the relationship between the two of them is interesting as well.

As a writer on any show, rule one is 'use your leading actors', and when you've got David and Freeman, that's easy. With David, you've got an actor who can do anything, he's just magnificent. So that's the exciting part of the shopping list! I was at the readthrough and the tone meeting and things like that, and you're constantly tweaking things, even as they're filming. David brings energy and integrity and warmth and dynamism and charisma... and surprise, actually. You can see it on the rushes, he gives the director 'choices'. But overall, what he brings to every script he works on is brilliance, and I don't mean that flippantly. You know you're in the presence of a truly special actor, and it's a joy to write for him. I only went down to the set for about half a day, on my way to a Torchwood meeting, and that was the 'Oh my God, I've written Doctor Who' moment. At the readthrough you're still working, you're thinking about whether the script's working, what amendments you'll have to make. As a writer, you're fantastically useless on set, your work should be done by the time they're filming, but that was exciting. Seeing them running along a corridor in a huge old paper mill, and [director] Graeme Harper shouting "Energy!" at them! That was exciting. Being filmed by David for his 'video diary' was plain weird. That was when I got a bit freaked out!

And has it been a rewarding enough experience that if Julie phones up tomorrow and says 'It's nothing bad but can you give us another one?' Yes! I loved it. It's very doubtful that the schedules would work out though – they just get crazier and crazier. These are rare times to be involved in shows that are so exciting and so at the centre of everybody's discussion of television – Torchwood and Doctor Who and Life on Mars are the shows everyone wants to be working on, so it's a privilege. So yeah, I'd do it again, but I don't think the schedules will work out that way. We all broke our backs this year, I got tonsillitis from exhaustion at one stage while I was writing. It's hard to fit it all in! >>>

BROADCAST
Saturday 14 April, BBC One

WRITER
Russell T Davies

DIRECTOR
Richard Stokes

STARRING
David Tennant, Freema Agyeman,
Ardal O'Hanlon, Jennifer Hennessy,
Travis Oliver, Leonora Crichlow

IN A NUTSHELL

The Doctor just can't seem to keep away from New Earth. Besides, he's got a new companion to impress, so he and Martha are soon off on a quick jaunt to New New York.

Their trip doesn't turn out quite how the Doctor imagined, though: the inhabitants of the city are preoccupied with regulating their own emotions, clogging motorways and making good their escape. So what lies at the heart of this desperate, spectacular city?

QUOTE, UNQUOTE

MARTHA, You're taking me to the same planets you took her...? Ever heard the word 'rebound'?

TV PREVIEW

TANTALISING, WASN'T IT? SEEING those glittering spires of New New York, so close yet so far, during Series Two's opening tale, New Earth?

In Gridlock, we finally hit the big city. Set a good few years after naughty car-nurses and Cassandra conspired to test the Doctor and Rose, it continues the show's epic Year Five Billion saga with an ostentatious display of imagination and verve.

"It was always the plan that in Series Three, we'd go inside the city," says Russell T Davies. "I had a dread of doing sci-fi cities, if only because things like Star Wars do them so magnificently, on a huge budget. But [visual effects house] The Mill had a whole year to think ahead, and it shows – I think it's glorious! And once we're inside, it's a madhouse! I was very inspired by Judge Dredd's Mega City One: the sheer barminess of the people crammed into a huge, bustling city."

With a new (new) city, naturally come fresh characters. For a start, there's Thomas Kincade Brannigan. A Cal-man – yes, we have male moggers this time around – played by former Father Ted star Ardal O'Hanlon, complete with classic Father Dougal McGuire brogue. "I wrote Brannigan as Irish, right from the start," says Russell. "I don't know why. I just did! Then Andy Pryor threw Ardal's name into the mix, and that was an immediate yes! His voice is so recognisable, and gives Brannigan a real warmth and depth. It was great when Ardal turned up at the recording, cos it turned out that he watches Doctor Who, the wise man. He already knew about New Earth and the Cats, I didn't need to give him any backstory, he was fully versed."

EPISODE 3: GRIDLOCK

Naturally, you'll be chomping at the bit to know which returning characters show their Face. "Of course," says Russell, "the year Five Billion is the natural home of the Face of Boe. Yes, he's back, as big and as Boe as ever. Last year it was said that when he dies, if he dies, he will reveal his final secret to a mysterious traveller... Perhaps the legend will be revealed, perhaps not. But there's many a twist and turn to come..."

Despite the overall sense of continuity, Russell insists that words like

"trilogy" or "arc" never crossed his mind. "The Five Billion stories have always been a spine – in an ever-changing programme, it's a location we keep coming back to, where we can build the mythology and the sheer comfort of knowing where you are. It's just been a consistent tick through our new Doctor's lives. We always want new viewers to come along for the ride, so as long as it's a brand new story, and not a direct sequel to New Earth, then I'm happy."

Amid all the snap and crackle of Gridlock, the Doctor and Martha's relationship is taking tentative steps forward. She wants to dig up his past. As you might expect, he's less keen...

"The Doctor's being slow and cautious about introducing Martha to his life," says Russell, "despite having chased her down in Smith and Jones. How like a man! And she's cautious with him too, realising that she hardly knows him. So gradually, they're getting closer, learning to trust each other. But with, as usual, a thousand obstacles in the way!"

JASON ARNOPP 4/10

BURTONS WHO ONE LTD

THE WORLD'S LARGEST STOCKIST OF DOCTOR WHO BOOKS

Visit us at: The Warehouse, Hawk Hill, Battlesbridge, Essex SS11 7RJ

Open: Tues to Sat 9.30am to 4.00pm

We feature a small selection from our extensive range of past and present Doctor Who merchandise.
To see our full range either visit us online or ask for a catalogue. Trade enquiries also welcome.

Join the Tenth Doctor and Martha for new adventures in these Hardback Novels

The Last Dodo
String of the Zygons
Wooden Heart

£6.99 + £1.25 p&p each or, all three for £19.99 incl p&p

Quick Reads Novel
Made of Steel
£1.99 + £1 p&p

The Runaway Bride DVD
£15.99 +
£1 p&p

6" Dicecast Collectables
Cyberman, Black Dalek,
Gold Dalek & TARDIS
£24.95 + £3 p&p each

Torchwood Vol 2
Cromwell
Greks Battering Cabs
They Keep Killing Santa
Random Shoes

Torchwood Vol 3
Out of Time Combat
Captain Jack Harkness End of Days

Double DVDs
£24.99 + £1 p&p each

Inside the Flah
The Guide to Torchwood
(Paperback)
£12.99 +
£2 p&p

Sylvester McCoy's
last adventure:
Survival DVD
£18.99 + £1 p&p

Buy the DVD and get the novellisation for just £1!

Renaissance of the Daleks
Big Finish CD
£14.99 + £1 p&p

BBC Eighth Doctor
Adventure on CD
Horror of Glam Rock
£10.99 + £1 p&p

BBC Paperback Novels

Amesbury Tale Ancient Cell Asylum
Banquo Legacy
Beltempest Bullet Time
Bunker Soldiers
The Burning
Byzantium
City at World's End
Coldcast
Dying in the Sun
Eater of Wasps
Earthworld Escape Velocity
Fuss-Eater
Heart of TARDIS Heritage
Hugs
Imperial Moon
Independence Day
King of Terror
Mad Dogs & Englishmen
Parallel 59
Panic Time
Pai-ence Fiction
Relative Dementias
Salvation
Shadow in the Glass
Space Age Storm Harvest
Taking of Planet 5
Tomb of Valdemar
Turning Point
Vanishing Point
Verdigris

For April Only:
£4.99 + p&p each p&p 1 = £1. Each additional = 25p or,
any five for £22.49 incl p&p

43 YEARS OF DOCTOR WHO
18 YEARS OF QUALITY SERVICE AT BURTONS

Klip It
Lunchbox
£4.99 +
£1 p&p

2007
Calendar
£3.99 +
£1 p&p

2D metal Keyrings
Logo and Dalek
£2.99 + £1 p&p each or, both for £6.99 incl p&p

Learn about the aliens fought by the Doctor in these great books.
Monsters and Villains, Aliens and Enemies and Creatures and Demons
(Due May)
£7.99 + £1.50
p&p each

New Series Novels
Clockwise Man
Monsters Inside
Winter Takes All
Deviant Strain
Only Human Stealers of Dreams
Stone Rose
Feast of the Drowned Resurrection Casket
Nightmare of Black Island
Art of Destruction
Price of Paradise
£6.99 + £1.25 p&p each or, any three for £19.99 incl p&p

Wrapping Paper -
2 Sheets
& 2 Tags
£1.95 +
50p p&p

Graphic Novels
Iron Legion £14.99
Dragon's Claw £14.99
Tides of Time £14.99
Endgame £15.99
Glorious Dead £15.99
Obsession £15.99
The Flood £15.99
(Due May)
£25.00 p&p each

TO ORDER: CALL 01268 764085 OR LOG ON TO WWW.WHOONE.CO.UK OR SEND A CHEQUE/POSTAL ORDER PAYABLE TO WHO ONE LTD TO OUR ADDRESS

PLACE: CAPITAL CITY OF THE PLANET LORAN.

TIME: JUST BEFORE THE
END OF THE WORLD...

LOOK! THERE,
SUGARPEA.
THERE! I CAN SEE THEM...

YES,
SWEETLEAF.
THEY'RE COMING
NOW.

I'M SCARED, SUGARPEA.
I WAS ONLY A LITTLE GIRL
DURING THE LAST WAR... I'VE NEVER BEEN THE SAME
SINCE... FOR A GALLOON AND I WET MYSELF!

I DON'T WANT TO HAVE TO LIVE THROUGH ANOTHER WAR!

HOW MANY TIMES,
SWEETLEAF? THESE ISN'T GOING TO BE A WAR THIS IS A PLANET CLEARANCE!

NOBODY LIVES - EVERYBODY
DIES!

OH, WHAT HAVE I DONE, SWEETLEAF?

IT'S ALL MY FAULT...

STOP SAYING THAT!
IT'S NOT YOUR FAULT...
AND ANYWAY, YOU'RE DOING NICER TO HELP THAN ANYONE! I BET NOBODY ELSE HAS THOUGHT OF THE GALAMITY LAMP!

MY DEAR, FORGIVING, SWEETLEAF - I'M AFRAID
NOBODY ELSE SEES ME
THE WAY YOU DO.

AND, MUCH AS I HATE TO ADMIT IT, SENDING AN ANTIQUE GALAMITY LAMP INTO SPACE ISN'T GOING TO MAKE A BIT OF DIFFERENCE...

I MEAN, WHO ANSWERS DISTRESS SIGNALS IN THIS DAY AND AGE...I HURDLY THE FASHIONABLE THING TO DO, IS IT?

ALMOST GOT IT... HOW MUCH FURTHER CAN I GO?

DON'T WORRY, MARTHA. YOU'RE SAFE... I MEASURED THE ROPE -- IT'S EXACTLY THE RADIUS OF THE TARDIS'S PROTECTIVE FIELD.

The WOMAN Who Sold The WORLD

Story
ROD DAVIS

Pinch
MIKE COLLINS

Ink
DAVID A. ROACH

Colors
JAMES OFFREDI

Letter
ROGER LANGRIDGE

Editor
HICKMAN & GRAY

WE SHOULD HAVE LEFT IN THE DIASPORA PODS. FAMILIA DOURNA SAID SHE'D BOUGHT TWELVE SEATS ON A FIRST CLASS POD AND HAD TWO BONGS SPARE...

I CAN'T THINK OF ANYTHING WORSE THAN BEING STUCK IN THE COMPANY OF THAT HATEFUL INSECT AND HIS HOUSEPLANT OF A HUSBAND!

BUT AT LEAST WE'D BE SAFE SUGARPEE.

IF YOU THINK ANY PLANET WILL WELCOME A FEW MILLION IMMIGRANTS WITH ONLY THEIR MAGAZINE COLLECTIONS AND DUBIOUS CONVERSATIONAL SKILLS TO OFFER?

THEY'LL BE FLEEING IN SPACE FOR STERILITY, AND THAT'S NOT HOW I WANT TO DIE!

NO, OF COURSE NOT... YOU'D RATHER DO WHIST DOWN A SPOT OF FLY, ON THE ROOF!

I'M TRYING TO GET THIS... HMM? CHAIR STARTED, BUT THE WHEELS HAVE SCIZED UP... AND WITHOUT THE INERT WHEELS, IT WON'T FLY!

YOU'RE NOT SERIOUS?! YOU'RE NOT TELLING ME THIS CHAIR CAN ACTUALLY... FLY?!

YES, THE CHAIR FLIES.

I WAS GOING TO EXPLAIN EARLIER, BUT...

I DON'T BELIEVE THIS... ALL THE TIMES WE'VE COME UP HERE AND SAT IN THIS CHAIR OVER THE YEARS... ALL THE SUNSETS WE'VE SHARED... ALL THE TALK YOU'VE BEEN LYING TO ME!

OH, DON'T GET ALL PRICKLY SWEETLEAF. TRY AND GET A SENSE OF PROPORTION...

I'VE SPENT FORTY YEARS KEEPING SECRETS FROM THE WHOLE WORLD!

...AND THIS IS WHERE IT CAME FROM, DOCTOR? THIS LAMP THING?

HEREABOUTS, YEAH...

WE-ELL, I SAY HERE-ABOUTS...

THIS WORLD, ANYWAY.

AND THAT'S OUR JOB DESCRIPTION, IS IT -- "SAVE THE WORLD?"

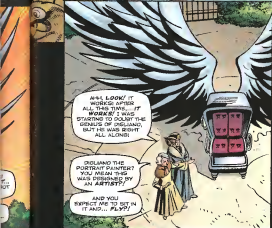

YEAH, SAVE THE WORLD, EAT THE PEAR, SOAK IN THE SUNSET ON A WHITE CHARGER... THAT KIND OF THING...

SSHHHWWSSSSSSSSHH

SOMETHING NOT RIGHT
AT ALL...

WELL, LOOK! IT WORKS! AFTER ALL THIS TIME... IT WOULDN'T I WAS STARTING TO DOUBT THE GENIUS OF DELAND.
BUT HE WAS RIGHT
ALL ALONG!

DELAND THE PORTRAIT PAINTER?
YOU MEAN THIS WAS DESIGNED BY AN ARTIST?

AND YOU EXPECT ME TO GET IN IT AND... FLY?

THIS IS OUR CHANCE, SWEETSLAP!
THIS IS OUR WORLD'S LAST CHANCE -- DEATH OR GLORY AWAITS US!

IN A FLYING
CHAIR?

DEATH AND HUMILIATION IS WHAT AWAITS US, IF YOU ASK ME!

WOTCHA! WHAT YOU UP TO?

JUST GOT A SCATTERED HOW-TO
TO MONTY AND THEN I'M ONTO REVEN.

UH, WHERE'S
YOUR MUM AND DAD?

SHH! DIDN'T YOU HEAR HIM? HE'S GOT A SCATTERED HOW-TO MONTY!

SOME IT REVEN
NEXT, COULD BE MANDOLIN AND STRIMMER DEANS!

DOCTOR, ARE YOU
SURE THIS TARDIS TRANSLATOR THING IS WORKING, BECAUSE THAT SOUNDED LIKE TOTAL GIBBERISH
TO ME.

THINK IS, IF THERE'S NO
EQUIVALENT IN ENGLISH FOR WHAT HE'S SAYING THEN YOU'RE GONNA GET WHAT YOU HEAR.

SO WHAT IS HE TALKING ABOUT THEN?

HAVEN'T GOT A CLUE

UH, HE ADVISE, SO,
YOUR MUM AND DAD...P

THEY'RE BUSY.

WELL, THAT MAKES SENSE.
IF THERE'S BEEN A CALAMITY -- A WAR, SOME NATURAL DISASTER
MAYBE -- ALL THE BROWN-JOES'LL BE BUSY.

MAYBE THIS IS A BUNKER -- SOMEBODY PUT THE KIDS TO KEEP THEM SAFE?

I ONLY SEE ONE OLD, WHAT'S SO SPECIAL ABOUT HIM? WHY BUILD
ALL THIS JUST TO KEEP HIM
SAFE?

"I THOUGHT SHE DIED YEARS AGO!"

I CAN'T BELIEVE
THERE ARE STILL SO
MANY PEOPLE DOWN
THERE, SUGAR! I THOUGHT THEY'D HAVE GONE!

LOOK AT THEM, THEY'RE THE HOMELESS, THE PRISONERS, THE BUSKERS, THE TOO OLD TO PICK UP AND MOVE... THE ONES WHO GOT LEFT BEHIND...

"THE GUES I KILLED..."

I'M GONNA HAVE A GLUCK
LOOK AND SEE WHAT'S UP THE TUNNEL.
JUST STAY THERE AND TALK TO LITTLE TUNNY FOR A MINUTE.

TALK ABOUT WHAT?

I DUNNO, TALK ABOUT KIDS' STUFF -- SKATEBOARDS, SWEETS, SODAS -- YOU REMEMBER...

DECAUSE...

HI I'M MARTINA, WHAT'S YOUR NAME?

KUPE
MY NAME IS KUPE.

SO... UM... KUPE... HOW YOU GETTING ON WITH YOUR "HAPPY SCOW" AND ALL THAT?

THEY'RE SCATTERED
HOWAS AND THEY'RE REALLY TICKY, SO BE QUIET!

DOH, LOOK!
THERE'S THE PARLIAMENT
BUILDING! AND
THERE'S THE PRIME MINISTER IN HIS OFFICE!

CAPTAIN GOES DOWN WITH THE SINKING
SHIP, EN?

WAVE, SUZARPEA,
WAVE!

WHAT IN THE NAME OF CHADS AND GALANTY IS THAT?

THAT... IS THE RETIRED EX-PRIME MINISTER, BARONESS
WELLYER, AND HER
LADY-FRIEND, FLYING THROUGH THE CITY IN SOME SORT OF WINGED CHARIOT,
SIR.

THEY APPEAR TO BE WAVING GIRL SHOULD I WAVE BACK?

TURN AWAY,
CHALMERS, I WANT TO FACE THE END OF
THE WORLD WITH MY SANITY INTACT...

THAT'S GOOD ADVICE, ALTHOUGH -- MARTHA! QUICK!

DOCTOOOORR!!!

TV PREVIEW

EPISODES 4 & 5:

DALEKS IN MANHATTAN EVOLUTION OF THE DALEKS

AS SELF-EXPLANATORY EPISODE

titles go, Daleks in Manhattan takes some beating. Reminiscent of last year's Snakes on a Plane – a movie about snakes, on a plane (it was!) – you would be forgiven for thinking that Daleks in Manhattan's blurtily descriptive title says it all, that you know pretty much what to expect from this two-part Doctor Who adventure. It has Daleks in it. They're in Manhattan. 'Nuff said!

Well, no. Its matter-of-fact title may defy deconstruction, but Daleks in Manhattan – written by the longest-serving of the show's four script editors, Helen Raynor – is far from predictable. The Daleks are at once less like and more like Daleks than they've ever been, the cliffhanger is as genuinely shocking as it is startlingly invertebrate, the Doctor Who visual effects team's capacity to turn twenty-first-century Cardiff into 1930s New York is so astounding that the pause button on your remote may become eroded from over-use, and a strange and wonderful love affair underlies a twisty-turny plot that takes Series Three's greatest preoccupation, an exploration of what it means to be human ("Human" or "Non-human" insist the Judoon; Shakespeare is "the most human human" that ever lived, a brave new world for humankind in New New York, in a few weeks' time, even the Doctor becomes human), to the next, terrifying stage.

Oh, and there's a musical number. A fully blown song-and-dance routine. Don't worry, though, it works.

"I saw the finished version of Episode 4 yesterday," enthuses Helen. "I was seeing virtually all of the effects and CGI for the first time, and, yes, it is absolutely still possible for me to get caught up in it – thank God, because the other instinct is to sit there and think of all the things that you'd do differently. The moment where Mr Diagoras meets Dalek Sec was quite a shock! I'd always wanted it to be visceral and gruesome – and it certainly is! I was really caught out by Frank's capture in the sewers, too. The Pig Men are so brutal."

There's always a satisfying 'classic' Doctor Who feel about a period adventure, and so much about the Daleks ("from their design to the 'sub-fascism,'" observes Helen) feels right at home in the 1930s. "I know we say Thelma, but actually it's the year 1930," she points out. "I was very influenced by horror firms of the time, especially Frankenstein – no prizes for spotting that one – so creepy sewers, showgirls in peril, and lab experiments all fell into my lap."

One of Doctor Who's best directors, James Strong, adds some show-stopping glitz and glamour to proceedings, which are, at times, a quantum leap – or Emergency Temporal Shift – away from his Series Two episodes, The Impossible Planet and The Satan Pit. "I wanted to give Daleks in Manhattan a different feel to the last two that I did," he confirms, "which were gritty, and dark, and atmospheric, and moody. I was extremely fortunate to get two such exciting episodes for my first Doctor Who, so the challenge this time was not to try to top them but to do something different. I didn't want to repeat what we did last year. It was a challenge to make them just as cinematic and exciting, but without having to rely on spooky corridors, and monsters, and guns and stuff... although there's a fair bit of that as well, actually! This is 1930s New York, and I wanted to play on that "I was trying to connect to my childhood reaction to the Daleks – that sickening, scary lurch in the stomach..."

Hollywood matinee, widescreen cinema sort of look – lots of wide angles, lots of colour, very showbiz. It's got that kind of Americana feel to it. We looked at films of the period – Samuel Boulevard, Gone with the Wind, Willy Wilder and John Ford classics, all those Busby Berkeley musicals of the Thirties – and, in our own little way, we tried to give Daleks in Manhattan that sort of feel. It was an opportunity for me to try something completely different."

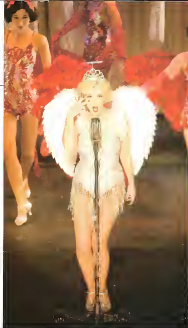

"James is Mr Film," chuckles Helen. "He always sets out to make a film for telly, and so he's hugely ambitious for the episodes. You can see that everywhere, from locations to casting to individual shots."

"There's no such thing as 'can't be done' on Doctor Who," James insists. "Anything is possible. It was always going to be set in New York in the Thirties, and you do think 'How the hell do we do this?' Luckily, we managed to do some filming in New York, without the principal cast – plate shots, basically. A lot of the architecture hasn't changed since then, so the benefit of going to New York to shoot material that's specific to our episodes, and our shots, was essential. There's nothing like the real thing. You believe that you're there, cos actually we were there."

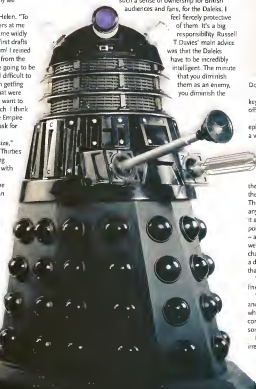

"Limitations?" wonders Helen. "To be fair, no one wagged fingers at me to start with, and I wrote some wildly over-ambitious stuff in the first drafts as a result. That'll teach them! I reined in subsequently, but I knew from the start that street scenes were going to be horrendously expensive and difficult to realise, so I concentrated on getting the most out of locations that were key for the story. But I don't want to congratulate myself too much. I think building large chunks of the Empire State building was a huge task for everyone."

"It's all about scale and size," says James. "We're tackling Thirties New York from an interesting angle. You could have gone with gangsters, or prohibition or whatever, but we're doing the Empire State Building. It's an epic adventure."

IN PREPARATION FOR writing the scripts, Helen watched some 1930s Dalek adventures, which "was great fun," she says, "and very instructive. I evolved a kind of list of things that I think work brilliantly for Daleks, and things that are less successful. I was trying to connect to my childhood reaction to the Daleks, too, rather than watching them as a critically distanced adult – remembering what gave me that scary sickening lurch in my stomach. There's such a sense of ownership for British audiences and fans, for the Daleks. I feel fiercely protective of them. It's a big responsibility. Russell T Davies' main advice was that the Daleks have to be incredibly intelligent. The minute that you diminish them as an enemy, you diminish the

BROADCAST
Saturdays 21 & 28 April, BBC One

WRITER
Helen Raynor

DIRECTOR
James Strong

STARRING
David Tennant, Freema Agyeman, Hugh Quarshie, Miranda Raison, Ryan Carnes, Andrew Garfield, Eric Loren, Fikri Swann, Alexis Caley, Earl Perlin, Peter Brookler, Ian Porter

IN A NUTSHELL
The Doctor takes Martha to 1930s Manhattan – one last trip in the TARDIS before returning her home. But something is rotten in the state of New York. Why are the poor, the starving, and the huddled masses disappearing, one by one? What stalks the sewers beneath the city that never sleeps? The Cult of Skaro is back – making a brand new start of it in old New York. If the Daleks can make it there, they can make it anywhere. The whole planet is in terrible danger...

QUOTE, UNQUOTE
DALEK This day is ending. Humankind is weak, you shelter from the dark. And yet, you have built all this.
MR DIACORAS That's progress. Gotta move with the times, or you get left behind.

Doctor's fight against them?" Did Dalek vernacular roll off of Helen's keyboard? Did she nail the lingo from the off? Or was it a struggle to get right? "Language is really important in these episodes," Helen explains. "Dalek Sec has a visionary rhetoric all his own – so I think there's a fair bit of 'untypical' Dalek dialogue in these episodes, just cos of the nature of the story. As regards your more standard Dalek – personally, I think the less chatty they are, the scarier they are. It preserves the terror of that unique, grating voice. The minute that you start staying near anything that sounds like Dalek small talk, it all goes a bit pastiche-y anyway. The point is, they don't chat. They're so direct – almost childlike sometimes cos of that, weirdly. Trying to keep them concise was a challenge. Trying to keep myself concise is a daily challenge, though, so I don't know that that's just to do with the Daleks!"

What, then, is Helen's favourite Dalek line in Daleks in Manhattan?

"But there are millions of humans, and only four of us. If we are supreme, why are we not victorious?" she says confidentially, and flashes a grin. "Well, someone had to say it..."

Daleks in Manhattan? Frankly, irresistible.

BENJAMIN COOK <@>

THE FACT OF FICTION

ALAN BARNES UNCOVERS EVERYTHING YOU NEVER KNEW ABOUT
THE ORIGINAL DOCTOR WHO

THE CURSE OF PELADON

EXILED TO EARTH BY THE TIME LORDS, THE Third Doctor falls in with the quasi-military UNIT organisation – and this is why it's often said that early 1970s Doctor Who represents a break with the series' pacifist, anti-authoritarian tradition. It's nonsense, of course – whereas William Hartnell's First Doctor, as far back as The Daleks (1963–64), was all for fomenting aggression among the peace-loving Thals, Jon Pertwee's Doctor was the first to clearly articulate his disapproval of military methods: in the conclusion of Doctor Who and the Silurians (1970), for example. But there can't be a clearer repudiation of the idea than The Curse of Peladon – because this, the first story in which the Third Doctor escapes UNIT and travels off-world, has, as we'll see, the most blatantly pro-establishment subtext of the lot!

But there's more going on in The Curse of Peladon than a parody of early 1970s politics. In other ways, it's a perfect example of the then-producers' view of the series – not least in its resemblance to 'classic' (ie proper) Star Trek. The voyage of the USS Enterprise had filled Doctor Who's Saturday teatime slot in 1969, and script editor Terrance Dicks is known to have encouraged his writers to study its blend of 'human interest' storytelling and adult allegory. On the 'human interest' side, The Curse of Peladon gives companion Jo the most sophisticated romance the series had so far attempted – not least in the fact that it's doomed!

It's more instructive still to compare The Curse of Peladon to the second season Star Trek episode Journey to Babel (first UK bc 22 June 1970), in which Captain Kirk's crew is tasked with transporting 114 alien delegates to the council chambers of Babel, where said delegates will debate whether or not to admit the mineral-rich world of Condon to the United Federation of Planets. But when the anti-admission Tellanite ambassador is assaulted, suspicion falls on the pro-admission Vulcan delegates – until a spy from Orion is discovered, his secret mission to stir up the delegates and doom the conference. Find and replace the proper nouns yourself! The episode also makes much of the fact that science officer Spock, like Peladon, has an alien father and a human mother. (And note that another second season episode, Amok Time, sees Kirk and Spock engage in a trial by combat not as all unlike the Doctor/Cirun scrap at the end of Episode Three.)

Seen today, the two Peladon adventures begin to look less and less like brooks with the Third Doctor's continuity than forerunners of a more emotionally and intellectually engaging Doctor Who: distant relatives of, say, The End of the World (2005). Only with rather looking monsters.

ALAN BARNES

EPISODE ONE Broadcast: 28 January 1972

On the planet of Peladon, a mountainside citadel is lashed by lightning.

In his Target Books novellisation, Doctor Who and the Curse of Peladon (1974), writer Brian Hayles creates the Citadel atop 'Mount Nigephra'.

Overseen by former Gerry Anderson hand Ian Soames, the Peladon model was mounted at the small 'puppet theatre' stage at BBC Television Centre over 15-17 December 1971, ahead of all other recording.

Inside, Chancellor Torbis (Henry Gifford) tells the young Prince Regent (David Troughton) that all of the delegates from the Galactic Federation have now arrived – all, that is, except the delegate from Earth.

21-year-old David Troughton was, of course, the eldest son of Second Doctor actor Patrick Troughton, and had made fleeting appearances in The Enemy of the World (as one of the Guards at Kanowa, uncredited, 1968) and The War Games (as Private Moor, 1969). At the time of The Curse of Peladon's production, he shared 'digs' with future Doctor Colin Baker... and was latched by current companion Katy Manning. (There's a wincon in that.)

High Priest Hephesh (Geoffrey Toone) warns that should Peladon join the Federation, as his brother Torbis proposes, the curse of Aggedor – a mythical beast that protects the throne – will surely be brought upon them.

Rarely has a Doctor Who story been so precociously of its moment. (Of, it has to be said, so ferociously pro-Conservative.) On Saturday 22 January 1972, one week exactly before transmission of Episode One, British Prime Minister Edward Heath signed the Treaty of Accession at the Palais d'Egmont, Brussels, paving the way for the United Kingdom's formal entry into the European Economic Community (EEC, or 'Common Market' in common parlance), the forerunner of the EU. The subtext of The Curse of Peladon, in which the proud sovereign state of Peladon is negotiating for entry into the political and economic Galactic Federation bloc, despite considerable opposition from both within and without, speaks for itself.

Bit of politics. British governments had been jockeying to enter the EEC ever since the ink had dried on the Treaty of Rome binding its founding six members – France (bien sûr), West Germany (as was), Italy, Belgium, Holland

TITLE
SOURCES SCRIPT SHOOTING
CAST & CREW CONNECTIONS EDITING MUSIC
SPECIAL EFFECTS
MONSTERS
VILLAINS
NOVELISATION
OOPS!
SPECULATION

A Top right: The TARDIS lands in a precarious position.

▼ King Peladon and High Priest Hephesh

and Luxembourg – in 1957. But the United Kingdom's entry had been vetoed by French President Charles de Gaulle in both 1963 and 1967, and it wasn't until after de Gaulle had been succeeded by Georges Pompidou (in 1969), and the violently pro-European Tory sailor Heath had berthed himself at 10 Downing Street (in 1970), that negotiations could reasonably restart. The four Curse of Peladon scripts were commissioned on 14 May 1971 and delivered between 26 May and 28 June. It's perhaps not such a coincidence, therefore, that Episode One was written during a 12-day period that included the single most important turning-point in Britain's quest to join the EU: the Anglo-French summit at the Elysée Palace in Paris over 20-21 May 71, following which Pompidou declared that he would not block a third British bid. It's this specific moment, surely, that The Curse of Peladon commemorates.

So who are these characters? Bachelor Peladon, with his back-combed bouffant, can only be a Ted Heath. Since Hephesh can't be a Harold Wilson – he's one of Peladon's closest advisers – he must surely represent the small cadre of anti-Europeans within Heath's own flanks: Enoch Powell, maybe?

The pro- and anti debate continued throughout The Curse of Peladon's production, recording (one episode a night at Television Centre, on 17-18 January and 31 Jan-1 February 1972) and transmission. Matters came to a head with the crucial second reading of the EU Accession Bill in the House of Commons over 15-17 February 1972 (two days before transmission of Episode Four), when the Government prevailed with a majority of just eight in favour (309 for; 301 against, including Enoch). The Bill was granted royal assent on 17 October 1972, and Britain joined the EEC on 1 January 1973.

Outside the theatre room, Torbis is killed by a creature glimpsed only by Peladon's mute bodyguard, Gryn (Gordon St Clair) – who points to a representation of the horned Aggedor. According to Hephesh, Aggedor's spirit has risen again.

The Curse of Peladon was a cut-and-shut job, cannibalised from elements of two story ideas submitted by Brian Hayles: its structure and contained setting from The Shape of Terror, a murder mystery bound to the confines of a research station on the planet Medusa Centauri; and some of its monsters from Doctor Who and the Brain-Dead, in which the Ice Warriors attack Earth with their brain-freezing Z-beam. Hayles came away from a meeting with producer Barry Letts and script editor Terrance Dicks on 1 March 1971 with the bare bones of

THE FACT OF FICTION

The Curse of Peladon's plot, noting – explicitly – that the Royal Beast was akin to 'the Hound of the Baskervilles', Arthur Conan Doyle's The Hound of the Baskervilles, a Sherlock Holmes adventure first serialised in The Strand Magazine between August 1901 and April 1902, begins with an account of the death of the elderly Sir Charles Baskerville, whose heart gives out after a nocturnal encounter apparently involving the spectral dog that first killed a Baskerville heir at the time of the English Civil War. This history is related in Chapter Two, The Curse of the Baskervilles – and it's worth noting that Serial MMM's second working title (after The Curse), was Curse of the Peladons. 'Forbes' death by the 'riscia again' Aggedor is roughly analogous to the death of Sir Charles, and sets up the 'supernatural' event eventually debunked by the hero's science, but that's where the Baskerville comparisons end – unlike Doyle's villain Stapleton, Hepesh isn't seeking to murder the rich heir outright. (For a full-on Doctor Who/ Baskerville pastiche, see John Peef's Missing Adventure, Evolution [Virgin Publishing, 1994].)

The TARDIS lands on the sheer face beneath the citadel, the Doctor (Jon Pertwee) having persuaded Jo Grant (Katy Manning) to accompany him on a 'test flight' from Earth... despite her having made a date with UNIT Captain Mike Yates.

The 'Yates date' line was inserted by script editor Terrance Dicks to account for the uncharacteristically glam costume given to Katy Manning by designer Barbara Lane.

All that's happening at UNIT HQ while the Doctor and Jo are away – the Brigadier joining forces with the Master, no less – is related in Doctor Who: The Face of the Enemy, a novel by David A McIntee (BBC Books, 1998).

The Doctor pockets a faulty component (the 'interstitial beam synthesiser') and they wait the ship – which promptly tips over and plummets down the mountainside, leaving them no option but to climb to the citadel above.

The TARDIS survived its tumble off a sheer precipice (with its crew inside) in a literal cliffhanger bridging The Reckless Desperate Measures and The Romans: The Slave Traders (both 1965), which perhaps explains the Doctor's relative lack of concern for his ship.

The mountainide scenes were pre-filmed at the BBC's Television Film Studios at Ealing on 16 and 17 December 1971, with stuntman Terry Walsh doubling Jon Pertwee in places.

The newly-arrived Federation delegate from Alpha Centauri – a one-eyed, six-armed hermaphrodite (Susan Fell, voiced by Yvonne Churchill) – is alarmed by news of 'Forbes' death, but Peladon tries to calm its fears.

Dialogue cut from this scene during editing underlined the fact that Peladon's formal coronation will not take place until the planet has achieved Federation membership, demonstrating the young regent's commitment to his cause.

Alpha Centauri's yellow cape was a last-minute addition, director Lesnie Mayne thinking the 'undressed' crimson way too people in appearance. Centauri's bulbous, one-eyed, vein-crossed head was worn by stuntman Stuart Fell like a hat.

In Hayles' novelisation, Centauri's body is coloured an "iridescent turquoise" (not green) – but changes colour according to its mood. Here, for instance, its tentacles ripple uneasily, "their colours changing to a milky blue in sure indication of alarm"; later, it's described as "palpitating green and blue" and "fluctuating wildly from mauve to pale green".

If Earth is a "remote and rather unattractive planet", as Alpha Centauri claims, Centauri's people can't get on much – the Alpha Centauri system is a comically puffing four million light years from Earth, which Peladon says is "many" light years away from his own planet. Acturus, by comparison, is a whopping 37 million light years away from Earth, give or take. Quite where this puts Peladon is anyone's guess, but Earth's distance from Peladon can't alone account for the its delegate's lateness (as Peladon suggests) – Mars, home to the Ice Warriors, is Earth's next-door neighbour!

Struggling, exhausted, on a narrow ledge, Jo finds a tunnel leading into the mountain itself.

The Doctor was given a line to cover the fact that he and Jo hadn't been rained on, despite the lightning ("Cosmosium sheet lightning but no rain. Weird"), but this was cut for time. Hayles' novelisation gives this insight to Jo instead: "... all that sheet lightning and thunder and wind – but no rain? ... I just wonder if we're still on Earth, that's all." (They're both wrong: the phenomenon of 'dry lightning' – where warm air evaporates falling rain before it reaches the ground, causing a 'waterless storm' – is responsible for many wild fires, particularly in the western USA.)

THE CURSE OF PELADON

Hepesh takes Alpha Centauri to the delegates' conference room, where it encounters the delegate from Acturus (Murphy Gurnibag, voiced by Terry Slaty), a weird, quivering organism housed in a protective globe atop a locomotive unit fitted with a heat ray.

In Hayles' first draft, Acturus' weapon was tried out on a statue, not an urn.

In the tunnel, the Doctor and Jo pass a shrine dedicated to Aggedor. In the Citadel, Peladon asks Hepesh that since it was he who invited the Federation delegates – why was it that Turluk died, and not him?

In Hayles' novelisation, Peladon's human mother is named 'Ellua'.

In a significant scene was cut from the broadcast version here, Hepesh draws Grun (hitherto dumbly loyal to the Prince Regent) into his plotting, persuading the nurse that since Aggedor spared his life, he's now beholden to do as Aggedor would wish, and protect Peladon from the delegates. In the novelisation, Grun then kneels to kiss Hepesh's ring, "a huge jewel carved into the form of Aggedor's face". With this scene omitted, the transmitted version gives the impression that Hepesh and Grun are in cahoots from the off, making Grun's change of loyalties in Part Four seem rather out of the blue. Hayles' story breakdown, delivered in the Spring of 1971, had Hepesh hypnotising Grun to do his bidding.

An ominous growling close by drives the Doctor and Jo into an apparent dead-end – albeit one lit with a torch, which works as the mechanism to open a doorway into the Citadel.

In a short scene in which Hepesh collects Acturus and Alpha Centauri from the delegates' room was cut for time. Hayles' novelisation expands on this, with Centauri venturing his disapproval of the citadel's décor ("And have you seen the colour scheme in my living quarters?"), much to Acturus' disgust ("We are here... to bring order and political unity to this planet – not to decorate it like a Centaurian fun palace!").

▲ Hepesh (Geoffrey Toone)

◄ Opposite top: The Doctor tries to restore Acturus' systems.

◄ Alpha Centauri practices practising about in the BBC rehearsal rooms...

◄ Opposite below: The delegate from Acturus enters the conference room.

▼ Jo (Katy Manning) tries to persuade Alpha Centauri (Stuart Foll) and Ice Lord Telyr (Alan Bennett) to help the Doctor...

The Doctor and Jo hide as an alien passes by – which the Doctor recognises as an Ice Warrior, native to Mars. They try to turn back, but are arrested by Peladon's guards. Ice Warrior Sroog (Sonny Caldinez) and his superior, Ice Lord Telyr (Alan Bennett) join the other delegates in the throne room...

In Despite having played Ice Warriors in both the creatures' debut, The Ice Warriors (1967) and their return appearance, The Seeds of Death (1969), Sonny Caldinez was not the first actor contracted to play Sroog – he replaced one David Purcell on 9 December 1971. Alan Bennett had played Slaty, the only other Ice Lord seen to date, in The Seeds of Death.

... where Hepesh describes the curse of Peladon: how the spirit of the now-extinct Royal Beast Aggedor will rise to defend Peladon when a stranger appears to threaten the Kingdom. Then the Doctor and Jo are brought in...

In The ensuing Jo/Peladon romance is given a decidedly Oedipal twist in Hayles' novelisation ("Peladon's gaze fell most intently upon Jo who... managed to look both elegant and beautiful. And it struck both Peladon and Hepesh that this Earth-alien had the face and form of Ellua, long dead." "Gah! Kkk! Lgh! Don't go there! (Etc.)

Telyr mistakes the Doctor for the (delayed) Earth delegate. Seeing Jo, Hepesh warns that only females of royal blood may enter the throne room, on pain of death. The Doctor introduces his companion as 'Princess Josephine of TARDIS' – an observer. Grun, meanwhile, has slipped away from his master's side, and prepares to dislodge a statue of Aggedor from a balcony outside. The squabbling delegates prepare to adjourn to their conference room – but as they file out, the Aggedor statue above topples over...

EPISODE TWO

Broadcast: 5 February 1972

The Doctor bundles Alpha Centauri and the Ice Warriors forward, saving them. As Grun makes himself scarce, Hepesh blames the spirit of Aggedor. Acturus proposes cancelling the conference, but Peladon recalls the delegates to the throne room. Prompted by the Doctor, Jo slips behind the curtain leading to the balcony, and uncovers a small metallic object...

THE FACT OF FICTION

21 Are the big footprints beside really supposed to incriminate Ssong, as the later scene in which the Doctor muses that "only Ssong's strength could have shifted that statue?" suggests? (Even Jo has the wit to point out that Ssong was with them at the time – and the Doctor should know, having saved Ssong's life when the statue fell!) Was Grun really carrying a lucky Ice Warrior's foot (or whatever) with which to falsely condemn Ssong? Or – since the footprints are never actually explained, unlike the treacherous key – has the Doctor jumped to the wrong conclusion? Funnily, the second chapter of The Hound of the Baskervilles concludes with the deathless line, "Mr Holmes, they were the footprints of a gigantic hound!" If this is what Brian Hayles is alluding to, perhaps they were (or were supposed to be mistaken for) Aggedor's footprints.

Jo meekles back as the delegates adjourn. Peladon asks Jo to remain, but when it becomes apparent he wants her as a political ally, she rebuffs him, saying she's "strictly neutral".

22 Here, Peladon talks of the values – justice, compassion and love – he learned from his mother, whose back story is spelled out in Legacy, a New Adventures novel by Gary Russell (Virgin Publishing, 1994). Although the bulk of the book is set 150 years after the events of The Caves, its first chapter delves deep into Peladon's history – beginning with the young King Sherak, first monarch of Peladon, being saved on a trip to the dark side of Mount Megaship by one of the fabled Aggedors, which is thereafter named the Royal Proceon. Many generations later, a spaceship carrying Ellus, Princess of Europa (Jupiter's moon – or a dry reference to the European intrigues that inspired The Corsair), crashes on Peladon. She marries young King Kellan, and inspires Kellan's bid to join the Federation – a process complicated by their son, Peladon, who succeeds to the throne aged 12, Kellan having died in a hunting accident.

In the Temple of Aggedor, Hepesh orders Grun to destroy the Doctor. Elsewhere, the Doctor identifies the object found by Jo as an electronic spaceship's key made of trilobite – a mineral found only on Mars, making the Ice Warriors prime suspects.

23 Since the sequel The Monster of Peladon (1974) takes us inside Peladon's own traitorous mines, the Doctor's reasoning is rather dubious!

A distant alarm calls the Doctor and Jo to the delegates' conference room, where Arturus is in trouble: the servo junction cube from his life support unit has been removed. Izly, Alpha Centauri and Hepesh arrive just as the Doctor is completing an emergency reworking of Arturus' systems. Jo searches the delegates' rooms, finding the missing cube in Izly's quarters, but is discovered by Ssong – who accuses her of trying to incriminate Izly. He leaves, locking her in.

A 'Top Princess' Josephine Grant

A Above: The delegates find that Arturus has been attacked.

V The ferocious Aggedor – easily pacified by Veronika Sullivan

2 Doctor Who fandom has long been amused by the fact that there's only one bed in this room, hinting at Ice Warrior on Warrior action, but it's made clear that these are Izly's quarters. True, there's no mention of Ssong being berthed elsewhere, and he comes and goes as he pleases... but it's a free galaxy, right? (Come to think of it – Izly's definitely a Lord, but where's it spelled out that Ssong is a slave?)

In their previous appearances, Ice Warriors came with sonic weaponry attached, but here Ssong picks up a rifle of sorts – indicating that the Martians have indeed changed their ways, to a degree.

Now we've already established that Peladon is Ted Heath. The Warriors are ancient enemies-turned-allys, who've revoked their marital pact... they're the French, post-de Gaulle, of course! As for Arturus... former industrial giant, its mineral wealth running out... he's most likely German. Which makes cowardly benevolent Alpha Centauri a slur on the entire Belgian nation. Probably.

Arturus recovers, but cannot remember who attacked him. Outside the conference room, Grun stops the Doctor, beckoning him away. While Izly relates to the other delegates his suspicion that the Doctor is plotting to marry 'Princess' Jo to Peladon, giving Earth an unfair advantage within the Federation, Jo contrives to escape Izly's quarters by the window, picking her way across a treacherous ledge.

1 Jo's footwear changes in the cutaway shot where she accidentally dislodges part of the ledge – her shoes are still pink, but they didn't have buckles before!

Intuiting that Jo's in trouble, Grun leads the Doctor into the secret passage. Back indoors, Jo hunders into the living Aggedor (Nick Hobbs), and takes flight.

24 From the outset, Hayles had imagined Aggedor to be more "ape-like" than werewolf – which makes the subsequent demonstrations of the creature's (admittedly low) intelligence fractionally more credible. It might also suggest that the Royal Beast could have been an ancestor of the Peladons themselves – a "mad relative in the attic", so to speak, which would fit well with the story's Gothic melodrama trappings.

THE CURSE OF PELADON

Jo, the TARDIS, the Doctor and Grun hear the creature's roar. Ursh flies. Jo runs into the Ice Warriors, but Soorg can find no trace of the monster. While Aggedor chases the Doctor, Jo tells Jo that removing the part from Archurus' life support arm could not have killed him, merely put him in a coma. The Doctor arrives in the Temple of Aggedor – but is confronted by Hepesh, who accuses him of sacrilege.

These weird laws about desecrating Aggedor's temple would appear to have been repealed – or forgotten! – by the time of the sequel, The Monster of Peladon (1974).

The Doctor is taken to the throne room, where the delegates hear Peladon pronounce the letter of his planet's law: to desecrate the temple is punishable only by death.

EPISODE THREE Broadcast: 12 February 1972

The Doctor claims ignorance, but Peladon knows of no secret tunnels beneath the citadel. Ursh asks Peladon to pardon the Doctor – but Archurus confirms Hepesh's assertion that under Federation law, the delegates cannot intervene. Jo pleads with Peladon, who offers the Doctor an alternative trial by combat, at dawn, versus the King's Champion – Grun.

The Target Books retelling has Peladon dredging up a memory from his youth to spare the Doctor. "A word of command and the servant would have been slain; but at his mother's quick intercession, he had held his hand, and decreed a far lesser punishment. Years later, that same servant had died, valiantly defending his royal master against a ravaging wolf; a life given willingly to a purpose – not wasted by a moment's thoughtless anger."

The Doctor is led away. Peladon relates to Jo the qualities he learned from his human mother – justice, compassion and love – and asks her to marry him. Jo runs out. Hepesh offers the Doctor the chance to escape – he will not be stopped if he follows a map leading him to his recovered TARDIS. He fears Federation reprisals against Peladon should the Doctor be killed – but lets slip that he does not stand alone...

As Hepesh states that under Federation law, the delegates are forbidden to intervene in the Doctor's fate. Gasps!

▼ The Doctor builds his spinning abacus... "Arson, arson, arson..."

Novelist Anthony Burgess summed up the fears of 1971's most fervent anti-Europeans when he wrote that "England is to be absorbed, her own distinctive character sequestered, and the end of a great Empire be completed in the bastardisation of a great empire-building nation." Sentiments that Hepesh – who here gives voice to his conviction that "The face of Peladon will be changed, the past swept away" should his planet join the Federation – would surely have appreciated.

Jo meets with the delegates who, despite the possibility of war against Peladon, resolve to do nothing to save the Doctor... who's building a rod-flee device with a spinning mirror.

It's never stated, but we're supposed to think that the Doctor has used the faulty 'interstitial beam synthesiser' taken from the TARDIS in Episode One here? It's a blatant non sequitur otherwise! (The device might just be a new sonic screwdriver, but it doesn't tally with the screwdriver seen in the following adventure, The Sea Devils – shot before The Curse of Peladon.)

Ursh tells Jo that since the Doctor saved him from the falling statue, he means to save the Doctor. Archurus, however, is eavesdropping on their conversation. Hepesh orders the Guard Captain (George Gles) to search for the Doctor – and to kill him if he resists arrest. In the tunnels, the Doctor comes across Aggedor...

It's not clear on screen, but the novatisation underlines the fact that Hepesh's map "had been deliberately drawn to lead him straight to Aggedor."

The Doctor has mesmerised Aggedor with his spinning whist, and is calming it with a Venusian lullaby when Jo arrives with a blazing torch, causing the beast to flee.

The Doctor was scripted to pacify Aggedor with a Buddhist chant – "Om, mane, padme, hum" – but in the event he resorted to the alien lullaby Klokieds pariba mameu klach, used to similar effect on the animate gargoyle Bok in The Daemons (1971) but two stories previously, and sung to the tune of the Christmas carol God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen (c1833).

Ursh confronts Hepesh in the throne room, demanding to know what's happened to the Doctor and Jo – who then show up moments later. But the Doctor has no proof of his encounter with Aggedor, and must now face trial-by-combat.

Hayles' Target text bridges the jump to the trial-by-combat sequence with three brilliant scenes not ▶

WHERE ELSE HAVE I SEEN...?

The guest cast's appearances in cult television and film: a highly select guide

HENRY GILBERT (d 1973)

Torvis

TV appearances include Danger Man; I Can Only Offer You Sherry (1966) as Sir Arthur Adamant; Love! The Deadly Bullet (1967) as George Marton; The Champions Twelve Hours (1968) as Dr. Hirsch; Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's Sherlock Holmes: The Cloning Men (1968) as Dr. Armstrong; Jason King: A Page Before Dying (1971) as Schultz.

GEOFFREY TOONE (1910-2005)

Hepesh

Other Doctor Who appearances Dr. Who and the Daleks (movie, 1965) as Terminus; TV appearances include The Persuaders!; The Time and the Place (1971) as The General; The New Avengers: The Tale of the Big Why (1976) as Minister; Only Fools and Horses: A Touch of Glass (1982) as Lord Ridgeway; Film appearances include The Terror of the Tongs (1961) as Jackson.

DAVID TROUGHTON (1950-)

Peladon

Other Doctor Who appearances The War Games (1969) as Moor; TV appearances include Survivors: Lights of London (1976) as Stan; A Very Peculiar Practice (1986-87) / Screen One: A Very Peculiar Practice (1992) as Dr. Bob Buzzard; Shogun's Captive/Sharpe's Rifle (1993) as General Sir Arthur Wellesley.

hinted at in the TV version. In the first, Jo calls on Grun in his official quarters, where—despite the fact that her knees are “wobbling like jelly”—the commander Grun to kneel. Her face takes on a “regal bearing” as she tells him that Peladon has promised to her, but if the Doctor is killed, his consent could not be granted—and the wedding would be off. “... I think you are aware that will make your royal lord—... quite desperately unhappy.” Alas, Hepesh shows up to prevent the wobbling Grun from wavering further.

Next, the Doctor and Song are seen in Peladon's armour, the Ice Warriors helping to kit out the Time Lord for the fight. “I knew your ancestors well, old chap,” the Doctor tells Song. “They were great warriors, bred for battle, and you're the culmination of their greatest qualities.” When Song fires that Grun will kill the Doctor, the Time Lord replies (after the boxer Muhammad Ali): “Hear like the butterfly, sting like the bee,” and launches into “his own version of the Ali shuffle.”

Finally—and most substantially—Peladon visits the Temple of Aggador, where he threatens the beast's statue thus: “Your title, once honoured, is now another name for Death. I say there shall be no more killing in your name. This day, an alien fights for his life... If he dies, understand this: all images of Aggador shall be cast down, and your shrines and temples walked up with the heaviest stones. All mention of your name shall be forbidden!” His speech is overheard by Hepesh, whose protests are put down firmly by Peladon: “You heard my words. They were addressed to my servant, Aggador. You in turn are his servant, and my subject!”

Al. Alpha Centauri in his rather fetching cape

W. King Peladon (David Troughton) asks Jo to marry him...

► Opposite top: The Doctor and the delegates work out who is really behind the conspiracy...

The Doctor and Grun descend by rope into a sunken arena...

► Filmed in the (campy) waterpark at Felling on Thursday 16 December 1971, with overhead shots used to disguise Petwick's double, Terry Walsh, (Gordon St. Clair, playing Grun, was a stuntman to start with.)

The delegates watch as they fight first with jagged spears, and soon with their bare hands. Eventually, the Doctor contrives to trap Grun in netting—then releases him. Peladon declares the fight over. Suddenly, Acturus's weapon emerges from its locomotive unit. A pulsing ray is fired...

EPISODE FOUR Broadcast: 19 January 1972

... as Song destroys Acturus before Acturus can kill the Doctor

► Weirily, the cliffhanger reprise is re-edited to remove the shot of Acturus's weapon appearing, making it unclear that Song was acting to save the Doctor. The cliffhanger itself tries out the same trick used in the previous year's The Mind of Evil (1971), where Episode Five shows the villainous Mander holding the Doctor at gunpoint, and a shot being fired... which is revealed the next week to have come from the gun of a third party, the Brigadier, and it kills the bad guy outright. Only it's not as well done the second time around...

► The Ice Warriors' weaponry has changed since the time of The Seeds of Death, their “cycling mirror” effect having gone, concentric red circles showing instead.

Hepesh edits. In the throne room, the Doctor and the delegates figure out Acturus's and Hepesh's conspiracy: the attack on Acturus was faked, and incriminating items planted on the Ice Warriors. Aggador is a surviving example of its species, captured and trained by Hepesh.

► And the Doctor knows this... how, exactly?

Acturus and Hepesh had a deal to trade Peladon's minerals with Acturus's mineral-depleted planet.

► And the Doctor knows this... how, exactly?

If Hepesh were to accuse Song of murdering Acturus, the members of the Federation might end up at war; but Peladon cannot remove Hepesh from office without risking civil strife. Having caught the Doctor's eye, Grun sneaks out. The Doctor follows. In the tunnels, Hepesh and the Guard Captain are plotting to invade the throne room; Grun confronts them, but gets knocked cold. The delegates vote to support Peladon against Hepesh by calling upon their orbiting spacecraft for “assistance”—but their communications have been sabotaged. The Doctor finds Grun, who indicates Hepesh's plan to take over the citadel. Then Aggador approaches...

► Handy that Peladon uses an Earth alphabet, or Grun couldn't trace an “H” for “Hepesh” in the dirt!

Hepesh's men overpower Peladon's guards in the throne room. Hepesh orders Peladon to return to the ancient ways of his people, else the royal line will meet an ignoble end.

Profile – set up by Pictwice stand-in Tazzy Walsh, who'd defected from the regular HAVOC group – its only Doctor Who credit.

While the Doctor calms Aggedor as before, Hepesh orders the delegates, plus Jo, to the throne room – and has no sooner instructed them to tell their masters that Peladon wants nothing to do with their Federation than the Doctor exerts, leading Aggedor by the horn. Hepesh uses a torch to goad the beast to kill the Doctor, but is killed by its falling claw. Peladon declares that Hepesh's insurrectionists will not be punished, and that the memory of this unhappy day will be wiped from their history. Later, the Doctor shows Jo the recovered TARDIS in the conference room. The Time Lords, thinks the Doctor, must have arranged for them to arrive at such a crucial moment in Peladon's history.

The Time Lords' reasoning is spelled out in the New Adventures novel Legacy, in which three Gallifreyan spooks (among them Chancellor Goth from The Deadly Assassin, 1975) discuss a predicted timeline in which Arcturnus' meddling on Peladon causes the death of Alpha Centauri – an event which causes the Federation to fall apart, affording the Daleks the opportunity to dominate the galaxy with their Time Destructor (a link to The Daleks' Master Plan, 1965–66): "One of the ironies is that the primary Arcturnian homeland is totally vaporized in the first minute of hostilities."

They've no sooner agreed to stay on for Peladon's coronation than Aggedor bursts in, the beast having become fond of the Doctor. As the Doctor leads Aggedor away, Peladon arrives and asks Jo to stay. She confesses that she's not a real princess, but his proposal still stands. They kiss. The Doctor returns, telling Peladon his officials are looking for him. He departs. Jo cries, but says she'd better return to Earth.

Oddly, the novelisation omits the Doctor concluding that the Time Lords had brought him to Peladon, plus Aggedor's reappearance and, most disappointingly, Peladon and Jo's last meeting. An indication of Hayles' dissatisfaction with this closing sequence – or an indication of his having reached the extent of his word count?

But as they prepare to join the coronation crowd, they see Alpha Centauri, Izzy and Scorg in heated debate with a new arrival – the real Earth delegate (Wendy Davies) ...

FURTHER INFO

VIDEO

THE CURSE OF PELADON
VHS
1997
100 mins
Region 2

NOVELISATION

THE CURSE OF PELADON
by David Whitaker
1975
128 pages
ISBN 0 231 02500 0
Penguin Classics

ADDITIONAL INFO

THE CURSE OF PELADON
by David Whitaker
1975
128 pages
ISBN 0 231 02500 0
Penguin Classics

Photo ... named 'Antaxonia' in the closing credits, but not on screen. Is she supposed to hail from South America, or is she named to suggest a real ball-breaker? (She's 'Madam Chairman' in the Target book.) Amusingly, by the time of Gary Russell's Legacy, Antaxonia has risen to become Guardian of the Solar System – and has borne herself a son and heir, one Martie Chen, the Daleks' mum ally in The Daleks' Master Plan.

The Doctor and Jo return to the TARDIS, planning a trip to see Queen Victoria's coronation. The aliens and the Earth delegate enter the room as the TARDIS fades away...

Photo ... It's hard to resist the temptation to suggest that sequel The Monster of Peladon, in which minnow miners are manipulated to rise up against the monarchy, was directly inspired by the fact that transmission of The Curse of Peladon's final two episodes was, in some areas, wiped out by power cuts caused by a miners' strike of 9 January–25 February 1972 (blackouts hit from 16 February). Doubtless, the strike influenced Brian Hayles' initial Rewrite to Peladon storyline of January 1973, which would have picked up the Peladon saga a short time after The Curse. Here, the woman Thalra initially sided with the anti-Federationists lined up against the reigning King Peladon, in part because she was supposed to have been married to Peladon, by arrangement, before Jo Grant came on the scene. The scripts were massively overhauled, making Thalra the dead Peladon's daughter, before The Monster of Peladon was recorded between 14 January and 27 February 1974 – slap-bang in the middle of a second miners' strike, of 10 February–11 March. Let's hope no-one decides to make another Peladon sequel anytime soon – the real curse of Peladon is these stories can't help but firestart national crises! <02>

DWM's Tardis Tin contains 50 taxing, tormenting and trivial questions. Each interviewee must answer 20 selected at random...

Words and Pictures BENJAMIN COOK

OUT OF THE TARDIS

what had really happened or she'd have gone. "For goodness sake, Camille, get over yourself!" – and my mum said, "No, we haven't got a will. We were thinking of doing one." I said, "Well, can you get on with it, please?" My dad died two months later. It was really sad. However, the woman I saw – the ghost – turned out to be my sister-in-law's neighbour's mother-in-law, who had died six weeks earlier! I described her, and they showed me a photograph and everything.

Who's the best James Bond?
Daniel Craig. He's fantastic. Up until that point,

Have you ever seen a ghost?

I have. It was in 1999, and I was on my way back from a wine bar with my sister-in-law, Jane, who lived in a mews house in Barnes, in a little road by a level crossing. We were at the end of her road, and it was really dark, and there was this woman standing outside Jane's house, halfway down the road. I said, "Look, what's she doing?" And Jane said, "Who?" I said, "That woman standing there." She looked like a cross between Mary Whitehouse and Vivienne Westwood, and she was very well turned out. She had a lilac blouse, a lovely skirt, blue rings – but she was rubbing her hand, and sort of rocking. She looked anxious. The weirdest thing was, I knew from the moment I saw her that she wasn't of this world. I said, "Jane, why can't you see her? She's standing just there!" And then this woman melted in front of my eyes! So I panicked, cos I had a babysitter at home looking after my children, and I rang the babysitter. She said, "No, no, everything's fine here." And I spoke to my friend, who's a brilliant clairvoyant, and she said, "If Jane didn't see her and you did, the message is for you." I said, "What message?" She said, "It seems to me that this woman was troubled because you have unfinished business." Well, my dad was quite ill at the time – in fact, he was dying – and my clairvoyant said, "You need to get things tied up before he dies. Have your parents got a will?" I rang my mum in the morning, and said, "Mum, I've had a funny dream" – cos I couldn't tell her

Camille Cook

It was Sean, and I did love Pierce, but Daniel is the man. I mean, the trunks in that shot of him coming out of the sea. Also, he's a superb actor. He's gorgeous.

How clean are your hands?
Really greasy and dirty. I've buttered all over them. And scrambled egg. [We're chatting over lunch at the Mad Kitchen in Cambridge Circus, London] But I'm always washing my hands. I'm obsessed. That's why they're so shrivelled and knackered!

Can you remember your first fan letter?

I can't, actually. [Do you ever get sent weird ones?] Mmm, yeah – but generally out of love! Someone wanted to meet me on Valentine's Day at a certain place, at a certain time. [It's worth a steak dinner, surely?] Oh, hardly! Ha! How can you say that? Mind you, I've had weird requests from some [firemen] or something who are at university – asking for my knickers and stockings, and saying that I've got a nice rack! I haven't replied. I won't even be polite about it.

Do you have a favourite pair of pants?

I have a lucky pair of pants. They're really saucy. I won't go into details or this'll end up in The Sun, but they're really saucy, and exciting, and they've a 'split personality', if you like. They make me really happy. [Grins] These are brilliant questions.

What mementoes do you have from your time on Doctor Who?

I have the trainers that I wore in the last episode. I go to the gym in them sometimes, cos I do believe that Jackie's trainers give me an extra kick – supersonic power! But I never stole anything. I can't bear theft. What else? I've a sonic screwdriver toy on my bedside table. I got it the other morning. The kids were in bed with me, and I got it out, and pointed it at the door – "Wmm!" – and made the noise. They were like, "No, Mum!" But I love my boys.

Do you follow Big Brother?

Celebrity Big Brother – yes, I do. But I don't think I will anymore. I'm sick and tired of reality TV. I was hooked this year, cos I couldn't believe how anybody could sit back and let that sort of bullying [of Indian film actress Shilpa Shetty] go on, really. Why didn't the other housemates step in? I'm always stepping in. If there's a rack in the street, I'll jump in. Oh, but I liked [Towers of London's lead singer] Donny Tourette. Hilarious! I loved him doing [film director] Ken Russell's hair. But I won't watch again. That's it now. Over.

Do you throw like a girl?

Do I hold I throw like a boy. I'm really quite masculine. I might not look it, but I'm quite bendy, too. I was netball captain at school. When I do anything sports-wise, I really go for it, cos I'm an Aries, so I'm really competitive.

cos it's actually really dull, and I've just started The Ate Ranner, which is Khaleel Hossain's first book. It's extraordinary – really moving. Get your tissues out.

Have you embraced the digital revolution?

I kind of have, but not, erm, physically, cos I just get my son to do everything! He plugs in all the Freeview boxes. He does my eBay.

What's the most money you've ever spent on a single luxury?

It was actually for my husband, last year. I bought him a brand new motorbike, with his own personalised number plate. The night before, we'd had a big party, and we were absolutely gutted. It was 5am when the doorbell rang, and I said, "Oh, I think that's for you." He

"I have a lucky pair of pants – really saucy! I won't go into details or this'll end up in The Sun!"

[Do you play fair?] Always. But if anybody messes with me, I deck 'em.

When are you happiest?

I'm really happy every day, actually. A cup of tea in the morning? That's a happy moment [Is your husband a morning person, too?] God, no! He's quite antisocial. He's really moody. He says I talk too much. He rolls his eyes up to the ceiling, and tells me to shut up. Hmm, I am quite annoying, I suppose.

What was the last book you read?

I put it down two days ago. It's a novel called A Short History of Tractors in Ukrainian [by Marina Lewycka], and it's absolutely brilliant.

I'm a slow reader, cos I like to have a few books on the go. I've been reading Perfume [by Patrick Süskind] for ten months.

said, "Have you got me flowers?" I said, "Um, yeah!" He went down in his pants, opened the door, and a man handed him these keys. "Sir, I believe these are for you." My husband was so happy. He was jumping up and down in the road, in his Calvin's! Also, I bought a beautiful brass bed about 18 years ago. That cost a fortune, and we've still got it in the spare room. I'm in it often, actually, cos we row [Guffaw] It's true! You can print that.

How did you spend your 18th birthday?

Ooh, my dad made me a great big rib of beef. He said to me, "You can have anything you want. A party? A holiday?" I said, "I want dinner with my family, and a big rib of beef." Looking back, that's really boring. How dull. But I enjoyed it, and there's plenty of time to do the harder stuff later on, which of course I did.

Were you ever bullied at school?

No, I wasn't. A girl did try to get me to do her homework once – cos I was very bright at school, up to a certain age.

She said, "Oy, you're going my homework for me!" I said, "No, I'm not. Get lost. She left me alone after that.

What's the single most embarrassing item in your wardrobe?

[Long think] I'd say that I don't have any, but my children might disagree. I've got his really... no. Maybe my... no. Sorry, no, I don't own anything embarrassing. Or maybe all of it's really embarrassing! Maybe they're all laughing behind my back?

What's your earliest memory of Doctor Who?

I remember watching Jon Pertwee appear on screen in his flilly shirt, and his velvet coat, and thinking, "I'm completely in love with him!" [How old were you then?] Oh, I must have been – what? – seven or eight, I suppose. [And you had a crush on Jon Pertwee?] A massive one, yeah. That's a bit weird, isn't it? I think it was because he was heroic. My dad was a hero – to a lot of people, actually – so I was on the look-out for that heroic thing.

What's the worst play, film, or TV show that you've ever been involved in?

How long have you got? [Chuckles]

That's a really naughty question, actually. I can't really single out anything, cos it might offend people, but quite a lot of what I've done has been rubbish! Some of it's been good, but some of it's been total pants!

Have you been visited by aliens yet?

"Aliens tried to steal my friend, who's a clairvoyant – they're always having a nose around!"

hospital on two occasions, but the first time was especially horrendous, because I realised that however much I wanted to live, and look after my children, and see them grow up, I was absolutely not in charge of living or dying. You can have the will, but it's not up to you. Well, that's what I think. Um – how did we get onto that from aliens? <*>

EMPEROR OF THE RADOOSS
This giant arachnid figure has 26 points of articulation £19.99 + £3 p.p.

INFLATABLE OR WHO CHAIR
£14.99 + £3 p.p.
DST NOW

CYBERMAN FACE WALL CLOCK
£14.99 + £3 p.p.
Sculpted Cyberman face wall clock

CYBERMAN PRINTED TOWEL
£14.99 + £4 p.p.

12" ARTICULATED FIGURES
CYBERMAN, CYBERLEADER, TENTH DOCTOR, CLOCKWORK MAN, DOO
£15.99 + £3 p.p. each

ANIMATRONIC CYBERMAN
This impressive animatronic will alert you when anyone attempts to cross its path with a variety of cyber-phones and realistic articulated marching movement!
RUG £25.99 NOW £15.99 + £7 p.p.

ILLUMINATING WATCH
Illuminating adults watch with leather strap and presentation tin. Choose from Dalek or TARDIS design
£24.99 + £2 p.p.

ANIMATRONIC FACE OF ROSE
£14.99 + £3 p.p. (p.p.s)

DOCTOR WHO MULTI CHARACTER WATCH
Choose from 122 multi watch with interchangeable face. Dalek, TARDIS and Cyberman
£5.99 + £1.50 p.p.

GENESIS ARK SET
Contains four Daleks and the Ark
£22.99 + £7 p.p.

KIOS DALEK SLIPPERS
£7.99 + £3 p.p.
New Day

CYBERMAN VOICE CHANGER HELMET
A.L.I. scale Cyberman featuring speech, sound effects and lights
RUG £25.99 NOW £24.99 + £3 p.p.

Gold Dalek and Cyberman DIE CAST MODELS
Two new packs due in April
£5.99 + £2 p.p. each
SHEER NOT LTD.
£19.98 + £2 p.p.

SUPERMAN CONSTRUCTION SETS
TARDIS, DALEK or CYBERMAN
Box contains a series of unique and innovative magnetic rods, standard rods, ball bearings and tough plastic components which assemble together.
£24.99 + £3 p.p. each
Cyberman Set £12.99 + £7 p.p.

DOOMSDAY GIFT SET
Set contains 17" scale Tenth Doctor, Dalek and Cyberman
£17.99 + £3 p.p.

8" WEREWOLF FIGURE
17" action and figure Tenth Doctor, Dalek and Cyberman
£16.99 + £3 p.p.

OFFICIAL DOCTOR WHO MERCHANDISE SUPPLIERS

drwho@galaxy4.co.uk

DALEK INVASION OF EARTH MICRO ACTION TALKING MOVIE DALEKS
2 1/2" tall with original dialogue and authentic movie Daleks
£25.99 + £2 p.p. (p.p.s)

SPECIAL COLLECTOR'S CHROME EDITION
Shine chrome Micro Movie Dalek
Only 1,000 units produced worldwide
£129.99 + £2 p.p. (p.p.s)

CHROME REMOTE 12" MOVIE DALEK
12" chrome plated Movie Dalek with full scale command, flashing lights and sonic blaster
Only 1,000 units worldwide
£39.99 + £3 p.p. (p.p.s)

SPECIAL EDITION 12" REMOTE DALEK
Dalek Master Creation Pyraline TARDIS Micro Dalek
Brain Command Talking Dalek featuring interchangeable weapons and Dalek control.
£49.99 + £3 p.p. (p.p.s)

PUSH TALKING MOVIE DALEK
Full 8" push with metallic base, soft vinyl appendages and authentic movie dialogue
£14.99 + £3 p.p.
Available in 3 colours - random colour supplied
Pre-order all 3 for one of each colour $10 POST FREE (See Age)

SPECIAL COLLECTOR'S EDITION SENTRY DALEK with flame cutter
8" Movie Dalek with flame cutter base and control authentic Movie Dalek speech. Only 1,000 produced
£25.99 + £3 p.p. (p.p.s)

TALKING CYBERMAN
Official Cyberman 12" full scale Cyberman and Cyberman CHROMED CYBERMAN BLACK CHROM TROOPER
£19.99 + £2.50 p.p. each

493 GLOSSOP ROAD SHEFFIELD S10 2QE Tel: +44 0114 2684976

Prices correct at time of going to press. All items subject to P&P. Free Post Office are UK only. We accept VISA, MASTERCARD and SWITCH/MAESTRO. Minimum order value accepted is £9.98

In 1999, four fans embarked on a quest to watch every episode of Doctor Who, in order, from the start. This is their ongoing story...

THE TIME TEAM

Compiled by MICHAEL PRITCHARD Illustrations by ADRIAN SALMON

PETER

CLAY

JAC

RICHARD

TERMINUS

The Time Team work down to watch Terminus—which begins with schoolboy Turlough fiddling in his pockets and whipping out his crystal for a quick chat with the Black Guardian. “Have we missed a scene?” asks Clay. “The crystal cracked at the end of Men of War, but Turlough doesn’t react to remaining at the Guardian’s power. I’m frowning in the direction of script editor Eric Saward—these lumps are getting for too common.”

Turlough starts fiddling with a TARDIS roundel—until Tegan turns up and they have a row. “Turlough’s got a point,” Richard reckons. “Tegan’s become very cantankerous of late.”

“Leave the girl alone!” protests Peter. “She’s quite right to be suspicious of Turlough. I mean, if he hated school so much, why is he still wearing his uniform? Come to think of it, why has no-one galled Turlough about who and what he is yet?”

“This is an unusual start to a story,” muses Jac. “Two companions have an argument for ten minutes, then Tegan goes for a bitch in Nyssa’s bedroom. It’s not exactly what you’d call a hook into an adventure.”

“I like it,” says Clay. “It’s fun to see what happens in the TARDIS between stories, just this once. I assume the Doctor’s off polishing his cricket balls!”

Turlough has a fiddle under the TARDIS console, causing Nyssa’s room to disintegrate, so the Doctor is forced to desperate measures. Richard frowns. “It takes me off when writers add extra functions onto the TARDIS, like this ability to lock on to the nearest spacecraft in times of trouble. It’s too easy.”

“Cough cough,” coughs Peter. “You’ve forgotten The Wheel in Space. Same thing happened then.”

Nyssa has no choice but to go through a spooky door out of the TARDIS. “I guess this is the only way to get her out of the TARDIS,” smiles Jac. “Stick a spaceship door in it and force her through on pain of death!”

“I’m intrigued by all this, it’s so different!” enthuses Clay. “Love the skull on the spaceship door, very spooky and mysterious.”

The Doctor follows Nyssa out into the darkened spaceship. “Why would Nyssa be leaving risky handprints behind?” asks Richard.

“I think the ship’s meant to look dirtier than it is,” protests Clay. “As with Snakedance, I’m getting the feeling this should be directed with a lot more energy and atmosphere.”

“Yeah, it’s the epitome of ‘wandering around dull grey corridors,’” says Richard.

The words are barely out of his mouth when there’s a rather timid explosion and some colourful figures arrive through the ship’s hall—space pirates Kara and Oliver. “It’s nice to see that the New Romantics will be back one day in the far future,” sighs Jac as Oliver reveals his Soft Cell make-up and Depeche Mode lurch.

“Flippin’ heck, Lisa Goldard is immediately awful!” shrieks Clay. “FREEEEEE!” Who’s casting these ‘space bitch’ parts? First Beryl, now this?

Peter’s attention is riveted when Tegan and Turlough are menaced by a deadly android robot. “Oh lordy. Could that be the worst monster ever?” The action cuts back to Turlough and he scratches his head. “What exactly is the Black Guardian’s plan? If he wanted the TARDIS on this ship, why not just get Turlough to reset the co-ordinates? If he wanted the TARDIS destroyed, he made a real hash of it.” He blinks. “And can we turn the volume down please? This ‘music’ is giving me a headache.”

The ship docks at Terminus—a huge space station—and the cargo doors open to reveal a hodge of ragged ‘peeps’, the Lazax. “Didn’t we have the usual shuffling about a space liner last time?” wonders Jac. “I suppose disease as the threat is not that far-out as an idea, but the mention of leprosy, a real disease that still affects a lot of people, seems oddly distasteful for Doctor Who."

Part Two sees the Lazars swimming out of the ship towards Terminus. "Interesting that they've decided to portray the Lazars in the classic biblical sense of lepers," notes Richard.

While Tegan and Turlough hide under the floor, the Doctor's party splits up—and Nyssa's obviously feeling the strain of recent events "Why on earth does she whip her skirt off?" wonders Richard. "Perhaps she thinks Olvir is one of Buck's Pizz!"

Peter's stunned. "Oh my. By Who standards, that's highly charged erotica. Blimey. That's quite the most surprising thing in the whole show, ever!"

"I wasn't quite sure why she was wandering around in her undies to start with," notes Jac, "but that's going a bit further than anyone expected. I guess she was a bit feckish."

"I was a bit feckish last weekend," says Clay. "Never occurred to me to whip my skirt off."

The action shifts to the Vint—'the custodians of Terminus.' "The muscular design of their armour is fine, but they sound very plastic as they clatter around," notes Richard.

"I love the whole knight image of armour, cloak and long hair," says Jac, "but it doesn't seem to fit, especially when we discover they're slaves."

The Vintir share out their consignment of hydromel, the drug that keeps them alive. Clay's knowing again. "Signa's line 'The bitterness taste of life' as he injects the hydromel is just gloriously As in Nyssa's overblown. What is this horrendous piece? But it's nice to see Peter Benson as Bor—brilliant actor, the biggest nose in the business!"

Jac nods. "Yet, bizarrely, their scenes are more dramatic than the actual story. It's frustrating that we don't get more of Turlough."

The story continues with Nyssa dragged off by the Garni, and the Doctor and Kiri discovering the secret of Terminus. "Hang on!" cries Peter. "How can jetsetting a fuel tank from a spaceship destroy the universe? Shoddy planning in the engineering department of whoever built Terminus!"

"It's a hairy, Douglas Adams-y idea," reckons Clay. "But done without humour it seems silly and prosaic. And it's very confusing—'if Terminus created the universe, where did Terminus itself come from?'"

Part Four sees the Doctor summiting the Garni to help stop Terminus from exploding and destroying the universe again. "The Doctor has said they can't move the lever because the computer is controlling it," says Richard. "So why does he say harming anyone but rather trying to cure them by exposing them to radiation," says Richard.

And... that's it. "The story sort of peeters out in the last few minutes," says Clay. "And we never find out for sure what happened to the 'cured' Lazars like Olvir's store. How peculiar."

There is one important thing Terminus still has to give us, however. Nyssa decides to stay there and help the Lazars. "She must be some scientist to be able to prove the nature of the hydromel by just looking at it!" laughs Richard.

"And if she thinks she can make more without equipment and raw materials, she's even better than that!" adds Peter. "I was going to say that her decision seems out of character, but we never got to see just her most superficial aspects anyway. Young Nyssa obviously had, etc., hidden depths."

Jac nods. "I don't think her potential was anywhere near realised, but I'm looking forward to seeing how Tegan and Turlough work together."

"She was generally a spare loner," reckons Clay, "but it's nice to see how her decision affects the Doctor. Though that's all down to Peter Davison's performance."

"That was rather a boring story," Jac sums up. "It did bear superficial resemblance to writer Steve Gallagher's previous contribution, Warriors' Gate—where Romana stayed behind to free some rather unsympathetic slaves, born—but was more straightforward and suffered for it."

"Somewhere, there's another Terminus," says Clay cryptically. "In another universe it was well cost and well made. Some of the ideas and images are intriguing—it could have been done far better."

ENLIGHTENMENT

The first surprise in Enlightenment is the name of the writer—Barbara Clegg. "Wow! We haven't had a female writer since 1966," notes Jac.

The second surprise comes with the opening scene in a darkened TARDIS as the Doctor picks up a strange signal from an old friend. "For a bang with supposed God-like powers," notes Peter, "I'm surprised the White Guardian can't even send a short message to the Doctor. But I love the spooky word choice music and the ghostly scenes of the TARDIS. This atmosphere is somewhat lessened when the Black Guardian appears and seems to find something very funny. "NYA-HA-HA-HA!"

"...and viewers may like to know that Valentine Dyll is currently appearing in Aladdin," says Peter. But this lapse is soon forgotten as the Doctor and Turlough step out of the TARDIS into—more darkness. The floor rolls—and they realise they're on board a ship. "Great stuff," says Clay. "The smoggy atmosphere's building, the music is creepy... While the Doctor and Turlough (both wearing eye shadow, oddly," notes Jac) make friends in the evil shadowing of c/o/c with the evil-smelling folds'll be sharing it with them for the duration of a mysterious race with 'Enlightenment' as the prize. Tegan is haunted in the TARDIS by a pair of hands on the scanner. "Very eerie," says Peter.

There's something very odd about the ship's officers—and just what is revealed in the last few minutes as Captain Striker opens the windows on the bridge. "Wonderful cliffhanger!" cries Richard. "This is, in the truest sense, a space ship!"

"I am spooked out," says Peter, fingers in mouth. "This is the strangest, most disturbing story in ages." Part Two, and Striker explains the nature of his kind and the race through space. "The notion of the Eternals using humans just for their own amusement is fascinating," says Richard. "The way they so casually disregard the loss of human life is

"Blimey! By Doctor Who standards, Nyssa suddenly taking her skirt off is highly-charged erotica! It's just so surprising..." PETER

The Vane live in terror of a creature called the Garni—though it's hard to see why when he makes an appearance. "Who let the dogs out?" remarks Peter. "What was that I said about the robot being the worst monster ever...?"

"Oh my goodness," says Clay. "The design, direction and acting are killing a good, unusual, script. Think about it—the TARDIS distinguishes Nyssa's got an incurable disease, that should kill her. The Garni fits in, as a way, as he's as filthy and snail as everything else."

"It's quite a colorful story, isn't it?" points out Jac. "I understand thematically why the acts and costumes are like that—but all the same, after the violence of, say, Swanstone, it's dull to watch."

"Two episodes in and I'm bored," says Richard. "Can we have some real old-timey hydromel?"

Part Two ends with Vintir Valgard attempting to throttle the Doctor. "Though as we've seen him knocked over by Nyssa, with the most feeble hit in the history of hitting, I can't see him giving the Doctor much trouble," sighs Jac.

Clay hums and haws. "I've noticed something," he says importantly. "It's been bugging me for a while, since Earthshock really, but I tried to ignore it. The wonderfully fresh, witty, sarcastic Fifth Doctor of the previous season has disappeared. Peter Davison's doing his best, but he's had no interesting lines, no jokes, nothing much to do except say what's going on, for a while now. Why are they wasting him like that?"

"Warning Tegan and Turlough as well," says Richard, as Part Three begins with them still crawling about under the floorboards. "I don't think the writer has a clue what to do with them!"

the pilot must have needed the strength of a giant!"

"Why would Turlough fiddling with a bit of underfloor wiring in the ship next door activate Terminus' engines?" says Clay. "Plus we've had no explanation for why the door to the TARDIS keeps fading in and out. Or why the skull was on the other side of that door, facing inwards."

Disaster is averted thanks to the Garni. Meanwhile Olvir's followed Nyssa and discovers how the Lazars are cured. "Nyssa's turned into Laila!" cries a thrilled Peter. "In slompies, flushing her cleavage and wrangling Olvir. Why couldn't she be like this before? Eg, as it is or is it not in here?"

"I like the twist that the Garni isn't actually

CLICHÉ COUNTER

Deaths on screen so far

00872

One or more of the regular cast rendered unconscious

00177

One or more of the regular cast incarcerated

00231

THE TIME TEAM

uncovering, I wondered where the story could go after Part One, but for once the explanation is as satisfying as the mystery."

"Brilliant concept," agrees Peter. "I wonder if the Celestial Toymaker was an Eternal?"

Clay's upbeat about something else. "The scenes of Tegan being pursued romantically by Straker's mate Marriner are unusual for Doctor Who, and very welcome. Dare I say that this story feels so fresh because there's a woman writing and a woman directing? We've never had anything to match this introspective and haunting atmosphere."

The Team got even more excited when the crew got up on deck. "The film material is very nicely done," says Peter. "This whole story feels much closer on the eyes and ears than the last couple."

But Richard's found fault with something. "I'm bored with the Black Guardian's constant taunting of Turlough. The sooner he's gone, the better – he just gets in the way of the main story."

"Scratching Turlough's first action isn't his taken," says Peter. "Even so, Turlough recovers very fast. Even Nyssa was tougher than old bad bones!"

Joc interjects. "Can anyone think why the Guardians have birds in their hair? Are they supposed to be live birds or dead ones? Are they decorative, or symbolic, or pest? Or are they, weirdly, supposed to be part of the Guardians?"

"Old bad bones" condemns Turlough to oversteering life, and Joc's intrigued. "This is becoming a theme: immortality is bad. Mawdryn didn't want it, now Turlough tries to kill himself. And that, incidentally, is a pretty stunning cliffhanger – a companion attempting suicide!"

Richard suggests, "Turlough climbs the railings to hurl himself overboard and all the Doctor can say is a casual 'Don't be stupid!' Even in Part Three, nobody discusses why he did it. How odd."

Thankfully Turlough is rescued by the villainous Captain Wrack and her first mate Marriner. "Oh my word, it's Laceyzeene John from the pop group Imaginatio," says Peter.

"Before my time," says Clay. "Were they good?" Peter scowls. "They were somewhat... fall on... But as he's outrageously carrying up the character or is he really that bad an actor?" asks Richard.

"At least he isn't covered in oil, wearing only a silver bodysuit, playing an air piano," says Peter.

The team have more moments to recover before Captain Wrack herself, played by Lynda Baron, appears. "Whoa!" cries Clay. "It's Miss Peggy! Suddenly this has got very camp. But I don't mind – it's fun without destroying the atmosphere."

"I love the concepts of the Eternals, but it's really only made clear in the character of Marriner." JAC

The Doctor and Tegan are invited over to Wrack's ship for a party. "Tegan's dress is stunning," enthuses Peter. "It's not in here again..."

"Love the Doctor's reaction to the outfit," says Clay. "Again, sorry to say it, but although the Doctor's getting more to do, his dialogue is very flat."

Something that certainly can't be said for Captain Wrack, who ends Part Three putting a bomb in Tegan's hair and turning to camera for a giggle at the Doctor's expense. "Oh dear," says Peter. "Suddenly we've gone panto."

"Oh hush," says Clay. "That was hilarious!"

Part Four sees the Doctor getting rid of the bomb by smashing it on a carpet with an axe and throwing the bits overboard. "That felt daft," says Clay. "And why didn't he just carry the carpet up with all the bits on it? Like the scenes of Wrack in her airlock chattering the Black Guardian through."

Marriner and Tegan's strained relationship comes to a head. "So his tenderness to her hasn't been romantic after all, purely a selfish desire for attention," says Richard. "It goes to emphasize the baseness of the Eternals."

Joc nods. "I love the concept of the Eternals, but it's only really clear in the character of Marriner – his quest for existence is more interesting than the others' drawing-up-pens. Wrack may have been about wanting to be admired for all eternity, but you only get a glimpse of what eternal ambition really means with Marriner – and indeed to Christopher Brown for a great performance." She's on a roll. "I also loved the destroyer of the eternal crowman Jackson. It's a shame he just vanishes – featured characters should get proper exits, or you feel cheated."

The story ends when the Doctor and Turlough throw Wrack and Marriner overboard – "very unlikely," says Clay. "But I can forgive this story anything!" – and the Doctor wins the race and comes face to face with both Guardians.

"It's nice to see the complete lack of surprise on the Doctor's face when Turlough's treachery is revealed," says Peter. "So he knew, like we did, that the boy was no good at all along."

"Not made very clear, though," says Clay. "And Tegan doesn't react to the news at all. Gah!"

Turlough rejects Enlightenment and the Black Guardian is consigned to flames. "I hope Turlough keeps his edge now he's a 'good guy'," says Jac.

"The action that Enlightenment was really the decision to do the right thing rather than a physical reward provides a fitting closure for Turlough's deal with the Black Guardian," says Richard. "I'll be happy if he doesn't show up again though."

Peter frowns. "It was nice of the Guardians to look that clear. Do you think they arrange fun activities for Eternals on a regular basis? Sports events, theatre trips, bring and buy sales..."

Clay's concerned, though. "For the most part that was exceptional. Even the camp excesses in the second half didn't spoil it. But I'm still very worried about how the Doctor is being written. How the time it's as if he isn't there..."

AND YOU SAID...

"Why do they need to save space by giving Turlough Adri's room? And since in between stories Turlough's been sucking up to the Doctor, winding up Tegan and getting down to some sabotage – obviously taking some time where's he been sleeping all that time?"
ALEX WILCOCK ISLE OF DOGS

"Hospitals usually have happy bright pictures on the walls. Stuffs weren't exactly well known for cheering people up!"
STEPHEN MARTIN HINCKLEY

"Nyssa never seems to get her due, from the writers, the Time Team, or most fans, but here she shows these qualities that endear her to her fans: compassion, wit/life, and a sense of justice!"
JIM WELKE ILLINOIS, USA

"Dull title, flat direction, dreary music; tedious plot. Wireless acting. And the sad departure of the most promising companion in years. It can only be timeless!"
ALAN SHERIDAN E-MAIL

"Enlightenment is a fine story but the Doctor seems surplus to requirements in parts and doesn't have a lot to do. The 10 clearly seen by the sheer number of shots of Peter Davison striding with his hands in his pockets!"
LEE NORTON E-MAIL

"The Eighties are really starting to kick in with the costumes here. Wrack could be Captain Hook's wife, the Black Guardian is wearing the secret bedroom curtains and both Guardians have Blackadder's duck disguise on their heads!"

ROBERT KEELLY BEAMINSTER

"We're on Earth again! Is played with exactly the same tone as when the TARDIS crew kept appearing there in the previous season – wonderful misdirection. Plus the misunderstanding with the Doctor and the sailors is very like a scene in Black Orbird – reinforcing the impression that this will be a straight historical..."
JAMES BEAMISH E-MAIL

JOIN THE TEAM...
In DWM 353 the Time Team will be on a voyage to the bottom of the sea for Monsters of the Deep and then going ghost hunting in The Awakening. We want to hear your views on these stories, so send them to the editorial address on p10, or by email to dwm@panini.co.uk (marked "Time Team" in the subject line) by 5 May, to.

SUBSCRIBE!

UPGRADE YOUR READING...

13 ISSUES OF DWM
+ 3 DWM SPECIALS

ONE SPECIAL IS FREE
SAVE £5.99!

£63.85

13 ISSUES OF DWM

ONE ISSUE IS FREE
SAVE £3.99!

£47.88

DOCTOR · WHO

► DWM SUBSCRIPTION APPLICATION!

Häufigkeit

Acid value.

Dunstable

Date of birth:

OPTION 1 Please supply me with 13 issues of Doctor Who Magazine (13th issue is FREE!) starting with the next available issue. I understand that any Special Editions are not covered by this offer. All prices include p&p.

☐ UK RATE £47.95 ☐ EUROPE £58.00 ☐ OTHER OVERSEAS £68.95

OPTION 2 Please supply me with 13 issues of Doctor Who Magazine, plus 3 DWM Special Editions (ONE SPECIAL IS FREE!) starting with the next available issue. All prices include p&hp

☐ UK RATE £65.35 ☐ EUROPE £5.50 ☐ OTHER OVERSEAS £25.50

► METHOD OF PAYMENT

☐ I enclose a cheque payable to Passive UK Ltd

☐ Please charge my Switch/fitbit/etc ☐ Visa/Mastercard

[illegible]

EXPIRY DATE START DATE (Five to six / 10 days / 180 days)

SIGNATURE _____

▶ DISCOUNT RATES

☐ My Doctor Who Appreciation Society membership number is:

I am a member of the ☐ Doctor Who Fan Club of Australia ☐ New Zealand Doctor Who Fan Club and enclose my DWM subscription discount voucher/label. Please contact your society for details on special discounts to DWM.

SUBSCRIBE AND BE SURE TO...

Save money!

Never miss an issue!

Have DWM delivered to your door!

Receive each issue without delay!

Avoid any price rises during the year!

► Post the coupon and your payment to:

DOCTOR WHO SUBSCRIPTIONS
PO BOX 503, LEICESTER, LE94 0AD
GREAT BRITAIN

► Or contact us by phone or on the web:

Telephone enquiries: 01858 414712

Credit card hotline: 01858 414720

Online subscriptions available at:

www.paninicomics.co.uk

panini COMICS

DVD PREVIEW

DISC INFO

STORYLINE The Seventh Doctor (Christopher McGoy) and his companion (Sylvia) return to the TARDIS. CAST Sylvie (Sylvia), Sylvie (Sylvie), Sylvie (Sylvie). RELEASE DATE 23 November - 4 December 1998

THE STORY

The Doctor takes his last trip to travel old friends, but most of them have been transported to the planet of the Doctor's People, a place with the power to teleport through space. The Doctor is transported and meets two friends, Sylvie and Midge. The Doctor follows and realizes that he has walked into a trap of his old enemy - the Master.

EXTRA FEATURES

- Audio commentary featuring Sylvie and Christopher McGoy and Sylvie and Christopher McGoy
- Special features include a commentary on the film, featuring three DVD commentary writers
- Car Race: a new part documentary on the making of Survival
- Endgame: the story of the final days of Doctor Who - and what didn't happen
- Look Back at a Doctor in his
- Doctor Who: the story of the 1997 computer game featuring Anthony Ainley as the Master
- Search for the Doctor: Search for the Doctor: a documentary from 1991 featuring Sylvie and Christopher McGoy
- Isolated Scene
- New 5.1 Surround Sound mix
- Original 1980s commentary audio tracks
- Book-ends
- Behind-the-Scenes
- Photo Gallery
- Production Notes

SURVIVAL

DVD 2 | entertainment | CERT 12 | PRICE £19.99 RRP | OUT 16 April 2007 | PREVIEW BY David Darlington

ONE COULD ARGUE THAT SURVIVAL is perhaps the most obvious Doctor Who DVD release of all. Not only is it (probably) the very last story of the show's original run, with all the attendant extra material that provides for behind-the-scenes discussion, but being largely set in a more recognizable, realistic depiction of Victorian than was standard for old-school Doctor Who, it is in some ways a prototype for the revived TV series. "We were aware of the parallels between Survival and the modern series," says content producer Steve Roberts, "so it became an obvious choice. We showed how it all began last year in The Doctor's Dilemma, so we felt that it was a good time to show how it all 'ended'."

It's not automatic that a workday Doctor Who release gets a double-disc set, let alone the substantial amount of extra features - how come Survival has been thought worthy of all the extras? "Well, Survival really isn't a workday release," Roberts counters. "It's the final story of the original, unbroken 26-year run of Doctor Who, and for that reason alone it's terribly important. I knew that we would be looking not only at the because there were a lot of contributors, all with some fascinating stories to tell, the extra time afforded by having a second disc set seemed proved useful. However, the overall running time of 85 minutes was considered to be just a touch burn - so, rather than cutting it down, I suggested the simple solution of splitting it into two parts. Anyone so inclined can of course still gulp it all down in one! It was particularly pleasing to talk to [director] Alan Warlock - he'd been unavailable when I worked on the Great Light DVD a couple of years back - although his busy schedule on Consultant Street meant we had to go up to Manchester to interview him. I was also very pleased with Adelle Stone - she's now a Big Bang Star on E! Entertainment - but she wanted to be involved and was really thrilled to be taken back to the original location. It was great to experience the warmth and affection held for Survival by the cast and crew."

The 'documentary' side of the release has been split into three significant areas - the production of the story, the end of the series, and the character of Ace - with each part being allocated to a different producer. "I knew from the outset that I wanted Richard Milesworth and Steve Brister to take on the main documentaries," says Roberts. "They had already developed a good rapport with the actors and production team when they put together the main documentary for Great Light, so I was keen to capitalise on that. Richard was very interested in telling the story of the unmade 27th series, and his tenacity resulted in a last minute agreement to interview [former BBC Head of Drama] Peter Creggan for Endgame, giving him one of the best documentary openings we've had!"

Indeed, of the many contributors, Creggan is perhaps the most surprising and significant - he's the man cursed by Doctor Who fans for and with for having been a key player in the show's cancellation! "Right from the word go," says

"I knew that we'd not only be looking at the story of Survival, but of what came after it - and what didn't come after it!" DVD producer Steve Roberts story of Survival itself, but of what came after it - and, just as importantly, what didn't come after it! From the outset I knew we had much more material than would fit on one disc. I was really pleased to be able to find an outlet for the Doctor Who (in 1997 computer game) material, especially as it was Anthony Ainley's swansong. Survival gave me the chance to edit together a package which showed off that magnificent final performance in broadcast quality rather than a low-resolution video in a PC game! It's amazing really that all the effects work was done at full broadcast resolution. It must have cost a fortune!"

"The story behind the making of Survival is a particularly interesting one," recalls documentary producer Steve Brister, "and

THE COMPETITION WINNERS...

AS DWM REVEALS THE 'WINNERS' OF THE SURROUND SOUND MIX

producer Richard Moleworth, "I wanted to talk to Peter Gregson, and [or Jonathan Powell] [former controller of BBC1] as to what really went on in 1969. Most of all, I wanted to know why Doctor Who ended the way that it did. There have been theories, rumours, more theories, conspiracy theories and the odd untruth bandied about in the past, but what I wanted to do was to, once and for all, get to the bottom of what happened. No response came back from either of them through the 'official' channels, so I resigned myself to their non-involvement. It got to the point where I'd recorded all the interviews for the documentary, and had almost finished editing, but I just wasn't sure that I'd achieved everything that I had set out to do - when it came to the biggest question of all, no one could really come up with the answer. Certainly [script editor] Andrew Cartmel had a perspective on it, having been in the production office at the time, but he had been shielded from a lot of the politics of the situation by [producer] John Nathan-Turner, and I'm fairly sure John never fully knew the reasons either. With less than two weeks to go before the finished programme had to be delivered, I decided that it just wouldn't do to not have this BIG question fully answered, properly over and for all, so I went in search of Peter Gregson on my own. I spoke to his agent, and asked what it was that I was doing with the documentary. I was more than aware that with Doctor Who suddenly the nation's favourite TV programme again, and that with the Cardiff production office, midpiece creaking under the weight of industry awards, it might not be a good time for someone to admit to cancelling it first time round. But much to my surprise, the answer came back that he would be delighted that he was able to talk so candidly."

The Enigma piece for which these interviews were shot was as its starting point some research done by DWM contributor Dave Owen for a feature for this very magazine a number of years ago, which investigated what might have just been the main commentary - there's a bonus commentary on episode three featuring three lucky readers of this very magazine. How did you guys see the competition? What did you do?

"I wrote a review of Survival," says Niail. "I wrote a rather negative review of the 1996 TV Movie."

"And I wrote about Believe," reveals Erykah. "But I think I only got praised because I was a gal... Well, surely girls aren't such a minority in Doctor Who circles any more? The best get, maybe! So, did you know which episode you were going to do in advance?"

"I guessed," reckons Tim, "because of the photo! I'm very bright..."

"There was a photo of Survival at the studio," Erykah points out.

"I read later on, I think that there was a going to be a fan commentary on Survival," Niail remembers.

▲ The competition winners: Erykah, Niail, Tim, and Mark Platt. From left to right: Erykah, Niail, Tim, and Mark Platt.

happened had the show continued into the 1990s. "Dave did a superb job with his DWM piece," Moleworth says, "and it certainly led me to believe that there was a good story to tell about the unmade 23th series. The big problem was that all of it was in people's heads - nothing was written down. So while one minute Andrew Cartmel and Ben Aaronovitch both seem certain that Ben would have written the opening story based on a 'Mistral' idea, the next minute Ben has his doubts over the BBC's ability to do 'Space Opera', and so thinks they might have done a historical 'Ben and Andrew talk about

"and I thought 'Oh, yeah - I entered that', I'd kind of forgotten about it."

"We entered back in August, September," says Erykah, "and then got a phone call from [DWM editor] Clay in January! Of: Are you free to do this on Wednesday?"

"Were you limited as to how to go about it?"

"I think so," confesses Tim, "but I was really dumb."

"We recorded for about a minute..." says Niail.

"...and it was rubbish!" finishes Erykah. "So they brought us a glass of wine each, and we started again."

"What bit of glass of wine, I got quite good," Niail recalls.

"The low point came when I said something to one of these guys, and they nodded back at me."

"Nodding's not good on a commentary, apparently."

Tim ponders: "You sound rubbish."

"And I say lots of very, very stupid things," says an embarrassed Erykah. "I did admit that when I was four, I used to want to marry Alice..."

"I think we started off thinking we had to talk about the episode itself and be very technical," says Niail.

"But it was a lot of fun, and it was a lot better the second time," reckons Erykah.

And what were you all like for the last two minutes?

Come on, there was 'The End for so, so very long. Did anyone get a bit emotional?'

"I think at the very end we did get that," says Niail.

"I mean, Doctor Who in general, even if it's ludicrous or badly written or badly acted, there's something really magical about it. And in Survival you do get a sense of this magical thing coming to an end, which is very sad..."

"And I was only one year old when Survival was on, anyway," reveals Erykah. "So I never had those feelings at the time..."

One? One? I was old enough to drink! No freedom, thank you. It's been slightly disturbing talking to you...

Mark Platt's 'Ice Warrior' story as being the one that would write Ace out of the series, and then Andrew suggests that Ice Warriors would have been his choice to write a final adventure for Ace. Ben and Andrew have no realisation of ever giving the new companion a name, but Colin Birkley recalled that she was to be called Kat - so who's to say what's right or wrong when hypothesising? (In general, I felt the memories were still quite fresh.)

As it turns out, of course, Ace never left at all, and was never really 'topical' as such. The character is the focus of one of the other documentary pieces on this set. "Little Girl Lost" is a feature that John Kelly put together for the Ghost Light disc. Steve Roberts reveals, "Just when we dropped for limo reasons on that release. This is a really good place for it - in retrospect, it works much better here than where originally intended."

"Steve Roberts gave me a call last December," agrees producer John Kelly, "and asked me to have Little Girl Lost ready for Survival, so I dug the tape out, ran through it - making the odd adjustment along the way - and here it is. Ace was an unusual character in that she wasn't a stereotypical screamer. I've heard several accounts of previous 'companion' actresses lamenting the lack of character development, yet with Ace the programme often appeared to focus more on her than the Doctor. Sophie is a really nice person, so it was very easy to work on. I imagine we could do interesting little features, if perhaps not full-blown documentaries, on most of the assistants of the Doctor. Although in fact, even as I speak, I'm working on another such documentary... so stay tuned!"

"As well as Enigma, I produced the commentary," concludes Richard Moleworth, "wrote the production subtitles, and worked with Steve Thacker on his documentary. I think I know more about Survival than anyone else over here will. Do you play me...?"

THE 5.1 SURROUND SOUND MIX

"THE ORIGINAL 5.1 SURROUND SOUND MIX" for Survival," reveals audio consultant Mark Ayres, "and a couple of reels of dub inserts that were achieved - though, sadly, not the first episode, which I have had to take from the t.t.m. I had to recreate some 'live' details." Including a few snippets of dialogue? In the opening scene, for instance, there's an "Oh my God" exclamation from the cat's first victim that wasn't there before..."

"The 'Oh my God' is actually me!" Ayres admits.

"The original location recording was buried under the sound of the wind machine and they didn't bother to increase it in the original dub, possibly purely because 'Oh my God' wasn't really acceptable in Doctor Who back then, so I decided to post-syn it myself. I am also the Master for one little utterance! You cannot get away with ignoring these details in 5.1." And what about that rather prominent 'barking' when Ace is on the hunt? Or the horse's hooves which rear up behind and shake the baggy out of you? The panning was actually on the original dub, and I found the recording - which I think is actually director Alan Wrenning, or possibly one of the original dubbing team. I've made a bit more of it in the new mix, though! The hooves were actually mentioned in the script, but not added in the original dub - but I added them here. Obviously I have six speakers to fill and every little helps! The most difficult job was matching all the cat sounds - I couldn't find all the originals, so you'll hear some differences at times! And I hope that the gradual destruction of the planet is more obvious, now - the rumbles and bangs get slowly louder and more intense as the story progresses. It was probably, in fact, the loudest of the 5.1 mixes I have done so far - but I am never sure whether that is down to the stories, or the fact that I get more ambitious each time!"

ILLUSTRATION BY BEN WILLISHER

THE COMPANION CHRONICLES

THE COMPANION CHRONICLES
A TALKING HEADS PRODUCTION
A TALKING HEADS PRODUCTION

BIG FINISH HAS ALWAYS HAD TO BE innovative when it comes to covering the full range of classic Doctor Who, employing 'Unbound' alternative universes, crackly fan-made recordings and re-casting old companions in new roles to ensure that the 1960s and 1970s get a look-in in the limo. The Companion Chronicles is another new departure: more-or-less monologues narrated in character by companions of the first four Doctors. It's a brilliantly straightforward approach, and one that lends these four plays a Talking Heads-style intimacy that sets them apart from the monthly releases. Wisely, the producers have also opted for single-discs, which has the added bonus of ensuring that these stories are reasonably concise, dispensing with any over-elaborate setup in favour of getting straight to the heart of the tale.

Freestyle, the first of the plays, is in many ways the most interesting, not least because it represents Maureen O'Brien's first reprisal of the role of Vicki since 1965-68 years on, O'Brien unsurprisingly sounds rather older than when she originally played the part – something that is explained by author Marc Platt in his story of a mature Vicki considering the relentless cycle of time. Nevertheless, she recaptures something of the feckless pluck of the teenage Vicki, mixing it with a wistful nostalgia for the days when she travelled with the First Doctor and Steven, and the result is utterly charming.

Minimising the austerity of the audio format, Platt creates a cold, crisp atmosphere from the moment that the TARDIS arrives in Regency London beside the frozen Thames. Facing a threat to the future of Earth, the First Doctor is as severe as he ever was, while Platt cringes turning Steven into a potential inspiration for Jane Austen's sturdy male characters. Playing with Vicki's bizarre screen departure – leaving to become a character from myth – and recalling Donald Cotton's recollection of The Myth Makers, Freestyle's structure and content is a commentary on the nature of the earlier story, albeit one that's good enough to be enjoyable without any special knowledge of Doctor Who's past.

The second play, Four of the Daleks, like the other audios is narrated with hindsight. The difference being that Zoe's memory of her TARDIS travels was wiped by the Time Lords. However, those memories now seem to be seeping through the mental blocks, and she is able to recount the story of her first tip with the Second Doctor and Jamie, and an encounter with the Daleks. Landing in a city built into an asteroid, the TARDIS crew discovers that they have arrived in a war zone between two empires: a fact that is being exploited by the Daleks and their unwitting ally, Professor Armitage.

Making much reference to Zoe's faded photographic memory and intelligence, writer Patrick Chapman keeps the story moving along at a decent pace, and, aside from an unnecessarily precisely phrased lecture at the end, captures the Second Doctor's distinctive mannerisms well. However, the point he makes about the Daleks' fear is hardly the dramatic revelation it's made out to be here, while the 'who's cleanest?' interplay between the Doctor and Zoe sounds re-hashed from a earlier sources. Despite a confident performance by Wendy Padbury, Four of the Daleks is not as strong as other plays in this collection.

REVIEWERS THIS ISSUE:

Wendy Padbury (Zoe)
Maureen O'Brien (Vicki)
Donald Cotton (Steven)

The Third Doctor story is The Blue Tooth, narrated by Caroline John, which features Liz Shaw's investigations into the disappearance of her friend Jean. Liz discovers Jean's is just one of many odd vanishings of scientists in Cambridge, who are linked to an attempt by the Cybermen to invade Earth.

So no expectations are set by the play's above notes, which suggest that this is going to be yet another Liz departure story quite unlike, given the way in which Nigel Hunt's gripping play unfolds. Making better use of the Cybermen than Floor of the Dole did with its own, The Blue Tooth from the start has the air of one of those steady and brilliant British horror films of the 1970s: think The Bait or The Collector or Sweeney and Sweeney Again. Boasting flesh-burrowing Cybermen and harrowing descriptions of partly-finished Cybermen, the story is genuinely creepy in parts—helped no end by moments of uncomprehending horror in Caroline John's narration, almost as if Liz can't quite believe what she's remembering. The end result is absolutely compelling.

In stark contrast, Jonathan Morris' The Beautiful People is the least bit of a corker. As told by Lalla Ward's Romana, it's an attempt to resurrect the Douglas Adams-style humour of the 1970s series, complete with absurd jokes and comedy music. Telling the tale of the TARDIS's landing on the health spa of Villa Nova and Romana's confrontation with the image obsessed Karma who plans for a universe populated only by the very thin, The Beautiful People is visually pitiless, relying on Ward's perfect recreation of Romana and Morris' jokes.

That's also where it falls down: the tongue-in-cheek approach of Season 17 was generally built on to pretty straight plots, which in the past has also been true of Morris' own work. After a while, the humour can become weary, particularly in jokes inspired by Tom Baker's anecdotes, and although it never becomes outright amusing, the play equally never threatens to become truly memorable.

Looking to draw links between the plays, the listener can spot a general feeling of nostalgia, and a joy in revisiting these characters and eras of the show. Given their first-person perspective, they also end up being commentaries on their respective Doctors: even when the Doctors' presence is more felt than seen. While Vicki treats the granddaddy First Doctor, Zoe and Liz tend to tell their incarnations with condescension or respect in equal, while Romana looks at them rather as an indulgent sister exploring their feelings and their fears. The Companion Chronicles offer a unique insight into their narrators, and are genuinely successful at what they set out to achieve. Here's hoping for many more in the future. MM

NOCTURNE

AN ADAPTATION OF THE PLAY BY JONATHAN MORRIS

EARTH ISN'T THE ONLY PLANET frequised by the Doctor. Taking his companion Ace and Hia to Glass City on the planet Nocturne, the Seventh Doctor wins a lyrical about the human colony that has become the counterpart of the Far Renaissance, a shining beacon of art, architecture and culture during a vicious and long-lasting war. Finding his friends including the terrible poet Kothar Raggole, and famed composer Kaelin Thessinger, the Doctor is all set for a gentle rest. However, Nocturne has become the home to a deadly creature that threatens to shatter the peace of Glass City and kill those whom the Doctor cares about.

The first episode of Nocturne is an intriguing set up: the Doctor's obvious affection for the place, and his delight at reconnecting old friends, is infectious, and a long way from his usual habit of arriving somewhere to find chaos and mistrust. As the Doctor points out, the distant Sun in Nocturne's sky and the planet's achievements of the Far Renaissance, Dan Abnett replicates some of the wondrous grandeur of The End of the World or The Long Game.

Inevitably, complications arise, although even when the threat of a sound monster created from biochemistry, able to tear material apart with resonant frequencies, matters there is still a languid, even lethargic pace to the music. Ace spends most of her time wandering the city with Will Allom, a hugely gifted student of Thessinger's who has scorned his musical career to join the army and was seriously wounded in the first few days on the front lines. There's a kind of BBC period drama romanticism to these scenes, and Sophie Aldred seems to relish the chance to do something different with Ace after she has been so many.

Meanwhile, Hia and the Doctor are at various points taken into custody by the official but oddly inefficient Roney. However, even with the threat of imprisonment or even execution hanging over them, neither seems to work up much of a sweat, and Roney seems strangely willing to release them despite giving every indication of being an archetypically paranoid biochemist.

"The Doctor's delight at meeting old friends is a long way from his habit of arriving to find chaos and mistrust..."

Much of Nocturne's curious power comes from the way it combines a pretty standard Doctor Who plot (murderous alien force on the loose in a futuristic city, and even characters fall ill, the Doctor's always meeting up with old friends even if on this occasion the audience haven't heard of them before), with a populating approach to pace, structure and resolution. Even the climax, which features a number of familiar clichés, feels different somehow, weirdly lacking in suspense or danger even despite an effective build up for the story's monster.

The cast, including a deliciously operatic performance from Anne Rye as Dillane and Trevor Bannister as the crusty Thessinger, all seem to enjoy the material, and, given the musical theme, the sound design and production is spot on. The final impression is of the kind of play you'd expect to hear on Radio 4 on a Saturday afternoon after a heavy lunch: well made, but something that's more comforting background noise than gripping audio drama. MM

BERNICE SUMMERFIELD OLD FRIENDS

AN ADAPTATION OF THE PLAY BY JONATHAN MORRIS

Over three novels, old friends reunite Professor Bernice Summerfield with fans from far past, all brought together by the death of mutual friend Tim Franks. Set in both Cardiff and America, Clonette's Clonette the Ringer successfully plays a plot of the rediscovery of old technologies, particularly through Bernice's latest observations about her now ageing friends—former cast pal Dave, less painful than he is, and college friend Sarah, now best by Alzheimer's Disease.

More than the ship of Plutonian Shadow rewards 50 years to Bernice's first meeting with two about a mile from her. Now a scientist turned a plot about a scientist, it's the quieter moment—in Bernice and her discovery of the past for each other—that are the most compelling. A revelation about how Bernice turns from Bernice's the South from into a martyr, despite a teaching history about his quest to find Bernice again, the story's real strength lies in Bernice's painful combination of a former lover she believed had betrayed her.

Overall, a powerful and touching collection that won't disappoint the Professor's fans. MM

DALEK, I LOVED YOU

AN ADAPTATION OF THE PLAY BY JONATHAN MORRIS

After a previous and TV critic Nick Griffiths writes the Dalek novel series for the Dalek novel series, he wrote the Dalek novel series. The Dalek novel series is a special requirement, and he believes that, the similarly cast 1996 TV novel and. A film once he was plotted in front of Special One Space aged best, to reveal the time when Doctor Who got rubbish (after Tom Baker, in his view), and now back in line with the revised series, Griffiths' book is a book that is a good one: the Dalek novel series, with hard reassessment. MM of the Radio Times 19th Anniversary Special, and the Super Series and Victorian Doctor Who promotions, will bring bells with anyone who grew up with the series in the 1970s.

Griffiths' present concerns No. 50's era and intersected with how he interacted and intervened many of his childhood heroes, but in the main, this is an unabashed nostalgia-fest without wit, wit and love.

This is a number of years younger than Griffiths and of a different era, but the medical anything that so effectively mixes opinion and feelings about the past and more books. If the kids, parents and parents don't quite understand a film's low, better Doctor, this is the book that might help them get there. 1/1

IMMORTAL BELOVED

IMMORTAL BELOVED: A NOVEL BY JONATHAN CLEMENTS. PUBLISHED BY BANTAM, 2006. 320 PAGES, £12.99.

IMMORTAL BELOVED OPENS WITH TWO lovers plugging themselves to an ascher before preparing to commit suicide – which they are prevented from doing by the timely arrival of the Tenth Doctor and Lucie. It quickly becomes apparent that Prince Karkin and his army, Savants, are wanted by the high in the land. Indeed, their continued survival is paramount. However, it's only when Lucie accompanies a wounded General Area back to the fabled 'cabinet of healing' that the true extent of their importance becomes clear. For the elite, the children really are the future.

This play illustrates some of the differences between this BBC7 media series and the TV show. Covering similar ground to last year's New Earth – the exploitation of genetically engineered humans, the downloading of minds into another body, and personal salvation – for all its talk of Greek gods and a Rome and Juliet-style star-crossed lovers, Immortal Beloved still feels like the product of another era, more akin to one of those dreary mid-season episodes of Blake's 7.

In part that's due to the inherent differences between radio and television, and the former's reliance on telling rather than showing. However, the main issue is that the pace of this story feels wrong, once Jonathan Clements reveals the truth behind the cabinet of healing, that's little more to be said. The Doctor blusters about outwitted ISK technology, and Lucie sympathises with the fate of the cloned youngsters, but for the most part the play just muddles time until the inevitable climax. While New Earth offered us a desperate race against time, a species of killer cats, a mythic meeting with the face of Bee and Casanova's destiny, Immortal Beloved has up its sleeve an ageing leader and a well-worn plot twist.

But if the whole is ultimately unsuccessful, then there's still much to enjoy in the individual parts. As usual, Big Finish has assembled a sterling cast who do much to bring to life the rather shadowy characters. In particular, Elspeth Gray as Hera adds some real pathos and a good dose of knowing humour to her role, while Ian McNeice's Zeus has some entertaining moments looking after Lucie. Zeus also gets the best scene in the play when he reflects on his thousand-year romance with Hera, a moment that's sadly not dwelled on, but one which offers a real emotional heat. Clements also tracts some amusing one-liners, particularly when Hera and Area discuss the original case, or when Lucie and the Doctor first arrive.

Though they spend most of the play apart, the listener senses that the Doctor and Lucie's rapprochement from the end of Heaven of Glam Rock has continued, and we start to see them as a functioning team. And while they still have differences of opinion – Lucie's a lot more concerned about Savant's feelings than the Doctor's clever deductions – the stand-up slanging matches from the start of this season seem to be well and truly a thing of the past.

Less than the sum of its parts, Immortal Beloved is diverting enough for 30 minutes, but never quite slips into top gear. 3/10

"Immortal Beloved feels like a product of another era, like one of those dreary mid-season episodes of Blake's 7..."

SECOND FLIGHT

SECOND FLIGHT: A NOVEL BY SHAWN LYONS. PUBLISHED BY BANTAM, 2006. 320 PAGES, £12.99.

SECOND FLIGHT IS SHAWN LYONS'S Series Two follow-up to Series One's overview look at the Doctor and his predecessors, as part of an examination of press reaction and past detailed episode-by-episode fan review.

Doctor Who's current high profile means it's virtually impossible to catch all of its media coverage, and the early part of this thorough and well-researched book uncovers plenty that you might have missed, including a newspaper spat between actor/producer Alan Davies and Christopher Eccleston over comments Davies made about Eccleston's reasons for leaving the series, and a report from The Sun that 'Victoria Beckham has splashed out on a book of Doctor Who acceptances for soccer star Bobby Beck, as he is 'completely obsessed' with the Time Lord'.

As for reaction to Series Two itself, it's probably fair to say that the love-in between the press and the 2005 series of Doctor Who wasn't as strong in 2006. Where David Tennant's first full story, The Christmas Invasion, seemed to pass by on a wave of festive goodwill, Series Two opener New Earth seemed to wrong-foot this press from the start, leading to several critics calling it a 'huge let-down' and one to write their review in the form of a sloppy first draft, adding 'If submitting a script that seemed half-done is good enough for Russell T Davies and the BBC, well, then it's good enough for me.' Second Flight sees this and other occasionally iffy reviews, as a case of the press pitching their expectations too high, or what in America is often referred to as a 'sophomore slump' – a phenomenon where a person riding high on the waves of press attention is perceived to have dropped in quality.

To be fair though, when it comes to the book's own reviews, its comments can be just as harsh. Novelist and critic Kim Newman, one of ten reviewers, Second Flight adds to comment on each individual episode, remains largely underwhelmed throughout. At around the point The Guardian's Charlie Brooker announced that his low effort with the series was 'back on' (School Runners/The Girl in the Fireplace), Newman sticks with a fairly scarping view not entirely connected by Tennant's 'over-enthusiasm' Doctor or the programme's willingness to resurrect K9, a move, he suggests, pushes the programme dangerously close to destroying its new found credibility, or – to use another American TV term – 'jumping the shark.' Saying that, he does find more to enjoy in two parts Age of Cybermen/The Age of Steel than many of his colleagues.

Second Flight offers a change in format to the review sections. Where Back in the TARDIS required two short reviews per novelist – one thematic, one general – this has been eliminated in favour of just one longer commentary. This slimmed down approach works much better, with enough opinions to make the debate feel varied but not so many as to make it feel confused and disjointed – as was the case last time. Losing the thematic reviews, however, doesn't stop some parallels looking at each episode from a certain perspective – Kate Orman, for example, who mainly considers characterisation, and John Preddie, who often plays his episode off against fan rumours going around beforehand, are approach that, perhaps predictably, doesn't always have the finished episode coming out on top.

Judged on the opinions of Second Flight's review panel, Series Two's runaway successes are The Girl in the Fireplace, two-part The Impossible Planet/The Satan Pit and Love & Monsters, the latter triumphant as the highest scorer with nine glowing reviews to one bad. Of course, as any long-term fan knows, series favourites can change dramatically over time, and like Back in the TARDIS before it, as interesting and valuable a document of press and fan opinion Second Flight is today, I suspect it will be more fascinating when looked back on a few years down the line. 7/10

Following on from the lovely girl Dalek Easter egg of 2006, this year's milk and Sponsons are Dalek Six egg for you to watch on. Thanks to the added advantage of featuring a reusable lunch container, these which have a scene 'Dalekmania' when one lightly broiled, again, the large egg is wrapped in Skunkies Milk, and the organic milk chocolate is very pretty indeed. It comes with an little fat wrapped chocolate 'toilet' with a dairy chocolate 'bracket' which, as every very much.

Also at M&S is a superb little Dalek Six egg cup. The top comes with a small but satisfying organic dark chocolate egg, and when that has been devoured, the base can be used to hold your own standard chocolate egg. There is an overview top to the eggcup which keeps the egg warm. Unfortunately the egg and milk sticks have been truncated and are little more than other sticks which are disappointing for the Dalek point. These are great with your and beautiful looking across the country could also be made by the dalek. Delays 1/1

A special 'Spin-Off' edition

WHAT'S BEEN GOING ON HERE? I've returned from my short break to find all manner of odd things in the Matrix Data Bank – a recorder, some jelly babies, a strange glowing crystal – among others. I dread to think what's been going on in my absence from the Matrix, but rest assured it's time to stop all the silliness and get back to some good old-fashioned question answering.

JACK TALK

First up, reader EMMA THWAITE of Islington is a big fan of Captain Jack, and writes to ask: "Where can I find out more about Captain Jack himself, the actor John Barrowman? Has he ever given an interview?" Sadly for you, Emma, the answer is no. A fiercely private actor, John Barrowman has never given any interviews and refuses to appear on television as himself, as he suffers from crippling shyness. His private life remains a closely guarded secret.

THIS IS GENUINE

IAN BLAKE of Croydon writes to enquire "I'll there a particularly baffling or silly photo in the DWM archive that has never yet been printed in the pages of the magazine? Luckily for you, Ian, there is. Take a look to the right. Over to you, Mr Davidson, for an explanation. Any explanation..."

KNOW ALL?

FIONA ENSOR writes via email to ask "It's driving me mad! I'm sure that somewhere in Doctor Who, a character says the line 'Suddenly, everyone sees and knows too much'. But in which story? And who says it?" Well, Fiona, received wisdom has it that this line is spoken by Davros in Part One of 1985's Resurrection of the Daleks, but in actual fact it's what the officers of Cardiff hear echoing around the bay whenever Russell T Davies looks at Outpost Gallifrey.

THANKS FOR THE MEMORY

Reader SIMON BRIGHT writes via email to ask: "I have a vague memory of three scenes from Doctor Who stories I saw as a child, but I can't find them listed in any episode guide. Could you tell me which stories my memories come from? My first memory is of a lady on an exploding spaceship shouting 'Whomans power!' The memory comes here, Simon, as this is not in Doctor Who at all but in the 1980 Blake's 7 episode 'Reveries'. 'My second memory' Simon continues, 'is of a short man in a sheepskin coat uttering a perfectly timed profanity through an open corridor in a bar in Peckham'. Again, Simon, this wasn't Doctor Who at all, but from the 1989 Only Fools and Horses episode 'Napier Lane'. Simon goes on, 'My third memory is of a conflict between the UK and Argentina over some islands: there was a rather sharp-faced lady driving round in a tank with a Union Jack on it, and something about a boat and an exclusive zone. It seemed to go on for weeks and weeks. Any ideas?' Well, Simon, we've discussed this in the office and we're pretty sure you're thinking of the 1973 Jon Pertwee classic Frontier in Space.

MATRIX DATA BANK

SPIN-OFF? SHOWCASE

JOHN AND GILLIAN WHO write to say: "We've massive fans of the original TARDES team of the first Doctor, Ian, Barbara and Susan, and we've exhausted our ideas of their stories. Did these four wonderful actors ever appear together in any other series?"

Well, luckily for you, John and Gillian, yes they did. The very first stories were a colossal coast-to-coast ratings smash when repeated several years later in the US, so NBC commissioned a spin-off pilot, The William Hartnell All-Star Variety Hour, in 1971. Carole Ann Ford and William Russell returned alongside Hartnell in a lively mixture of sketches, songs and dance numbers, but Jacqueline Hill refused to participate, so Barbara was recast, the part going to Tippi Hedren. Highlights included Ian and Barbara singing Anything You Can Do, I Can Do Better, and the Doctor's disco rendition of Baby Face to Susan. Sadly the series never got beyond the pilot stage.

FAN FORMULAS

Reader MICHAEL CREGAN writes via email to say: "I love Doctor Who, but I don't know any other Doctor Who fans. Please Sarah, can you tell me what they are like?"

Luckily for you, Michael, I can. All Doctor Who fans between the ages of 15 and 40 behave according to two simple equations. The first of these is:

$$x = f \times Y$$ an infinitely repeated cycle where x = Anticipation, f = Disappointment and Y = Parity Reappraisal.

For example, Fan A is anticipating a new piece of Doctor Who in some form. This is x (ie. When's the series coming back? What day is that DVD coming out? Has anybody got the new DWM yet?) Sure as day follows night, this is followed by f – disappointment (ie. What a rotten episode to start a season! The extras on this DVD are lame! Don't like the comic strip!) And then, in the short period before the inevitable return of x , comes Y – parity reappraisal (ie. Series Three won't be as good as Series Two! The last DVD was a better choice than the next DVD! The new DWM has a grotty cover compared to the last DWM!).

The second equation of Fandom is:

$$z + q - b$$

where z = the past, q = the future and b = the present. For example – Fan C worries about z , the past (ie. Why did they ever kill Ian and Polly? Why were the ratings poor for Season Eighteen? What would have happened if John Nathan-Turner had left after The Five Doctors?) while simultaneously worrying about q , the future (ie. What if the show gets axed again? What will happen when David Tennant leaves? Are the Sentinels coming back and if not why not?), thus destroying entirely any pleasure they might receive from b , the present.

Now turn over your papers and begin!

COLIN WHO...?

Lastly, STEPHEN POVEY of Ipswich has written in, asking: "A friend of mine tells me about the actor Colin Baker since appeared in Doctor Who. Can you tell me more about this?" I'm sorry Stephen, but unfortunately your friend seems to have been misinformed. No records of Colin Baker exist anywhere at the BBC.

Well, I feel quite tired out after all that, and let's face it I deserve a holiday. So I'm off to watch The Phoenix Rises and the colourised (in pine and green) Tenth Planet Episode 4. Bye-bye!

YOUR DOCTOR WHO QUERIES ANSWERED BY SCARLETT

PRODUCTION Notes

MARCHING ON...

IT'S WEIRD, WRITING THIS COLUMN AT this time of year, cos you know so much more than me! Because of DWM's printing deadlines, I'm writing this in the first week of March, but you're way ahead. What happened? Was the first episode delayed by a state of the nation address from Sholz? Were we taken off air because a real hospital was transported to the Moon? More scary by far, has ITV thrown Saron Cowell up against us?

I'll pause for an anecdote. Hey, it's my page. But I once spent an afternoon working in Simon Cowell's office, before Pop Idol, before he was The Big TV Cheese, though he already ruled an empire. I'd been sent there because Granada wanted me to write a drama about a boy band. Oh be fair, I was young. And besides, it would've worked! But I sat there for hours and watched him work, and if you know what? I loved him. Absolutely loved him. Out of all the record company types I met that week, he was by far and away the most honest. Anyway, there's no puntline to this anecdote – did I say, it's my page? – but I've been haunted by the thought ever since: why didn't I say for him?? Think where I could be now! (Sssss, probably.)

But back here in these older days of March, it's still busy. Did I know last month about having finished the scripts? Well, of course, there have been more rowflies since, as there always are: just little glitches and fixes, as the cast and crew march on, with eight more days of filming to go. Tomorrow, on 7 March, we're reviewing the final dub of Daskis in Manchester, with more of Murray Gold's Daskis choir being promised. And tonight, I've just sent notes on the final edit of 42, which is hugely exciting and marvellously scary. 'Burn with me? Oooh, brilliant.'

(While I'm in celebrity anecdote mood – my page, remember? – I've also been to Norway with Keith Chegwin. I love dropping that sentence into conversations. It was when I was working for Children's BBC, and he was making a show called Cheggers

"RIGHT NOW, PLANS ARE IN FLUX. I CAN'T RISK SAYING SOMETHING I SHOULDN'T!"

Cheeky Out Politics. Surely you remember it? Anyway, Norway had a Minister for Children, so off we went to interview her. Again, no puntline, folks. But Norway! Keith Chegwin! Back in my glamour!

At the same time, we're preparing for the Press Launch in Old London Town on 21 March – be prepared for paparazzi: photographs of Nick Briggs arriving with Jordan and Maureen of Dancing School – but this leads me to my real problem. Normally, in Production Notes at this time of year, I'd be hiding away about the next series. But does Series Four exist? You might well know, by now, you there in the future, cos maybe, just maybe, there are plans for an announcement at the Press Launch. But right now, in my timeline, those plans are in flux – things might happen, things might not, the plans change every day, in typical BBC fashion – and I can't risk saying something I shouldn't. Which leaves me stuck! Production Notes is trapped in a quantum state of perplexity. But in the meantime, what do I fill this page with?

RUSSELL T DAVIES
TAKES US BEHIND
THE SCENES...

(Hence the celebrity anecdote! In brackets! IT'S MY PAGE! I've also worked with Jamie Nolan, and Rolf Harris, and Everything But The Girl. I had dinner in New York with Ally Sheedy – actually, that is a bit glamorous – and a meal in LA with that man who plays Les's dad in Sons of Anarchy. And you, this is nothing compared to my friend Alex. She was once engaged to the heir to Sutherland's Spreads, went out with [faded John], and snogged Marc Bolan! Go Alex!

I'm now looking at my schedule for next week, full of things that may or may not be officially happening, meetings that now set off Doctor Who-type alarms, labelled QUANTUM ALERT! On Tuesday, there's a meeting with Gareth Roberts, to discuss [QUANTUM ALERT!] Then a quick catch-up with Stephen Greenhorn, to talk through the radical idea for [QUANTUM ALERT!] Oh, and look, there's an email from Steven Moffat, asking if [QUANTUM ALERT!]

You see? It's impossible! It was complicated even last month, with poor old DWM printing the original transcript date, which then got shifted because of the bleedin' football. So I'm afraid, faithful reader, you're left with only...

'Naze, I've met her – in the glorious days of Saturday morning kids' TV, you'd meet 'em all, travelling in and out of the BBC studios – Vanessa Lee, Keith Chegwin, Esther Rantzen, Paul Daniels and Debbie Magye, oh yes. And my favourite celebrity encounter was back in those days, filming backstage at Top of the Pops – and whoever thought that sentence would date you? But we were filming with Kylie Minogue, and the preamble to this item was 'guess which celebrity we're visiting?' during which we'd show a number of props. A kangaroo, a Nightriders calendar, etc. And one of these props was a herbal teabag – the genuine article, actually given to us by Kylie herself. But once filming was over, I realised I was still clutching the precious herbal teabag. I went back into the warren of dressing rooms, to return it. But couldn't remember which room she was in! I took a guess, knocked at a door, stood there waiting. The door opened. There stood Edwin Starr. In his pants. I looked at him. Edwin Starr looked at me with a herbal teabag. Him in his pants. He glowered. I quailed. And then I said the most doleful sentence of my life: 'you're not Kylie Minogue, are you?'

Normal service will be resumed. <E>

Illustration
BEN WILLSHER

EXCITING NEW MERCHANDISE

Ceramic Easter Products:
Double Egg Cup with Two Milk Chocolate Eggs
£5.00 plus £1.50 UK postage
Mug with Chocolate Egg
£3.00 plus £1.50 UK postage.

Wrapping Paper & Tags:
Stunning designs featuring
Daleks, Cybermen, TARDIS
& the Doctor Who Logo.
2 Sheets plus 2 Gift Tags.
£2.00 plus £1.25 UK postage.

'The Runaway Bride' on DVD;
The 2006 Christmas Special starring David Tennant, Sarah Parish and Catherine Tate.
Signed copy available on request.
£15.99 FREE UK postage.

'Made of Steel' Short Novel;
The 2nd 'Quick Reads' novel featuring the Doctor,
Martha and the Cybermen.
Signed copy available on request.
£1.99 plus £1.25 UK postage.

Torchwood Audio Books;
Border Princes read by Eve
Myles; Slow Decay read by Ben Gormon; Another Life read by John Barrowman. Signed copies available on request; £15.99 plus £1.50 UK postage or buy all THREE for just £47.97 with FREE UK postage.

Three New BBC Adventures;
The Last Dodo by Jacqueline Rayner; Sting of the Zygons by Stephen Cole; Wooden Heart by Martin Day.
£6.99 plus £1.50 UK postage or buy all THREE for just £20.97 with FREE UK postage.

Doctor Who Inflatable Chair;
A large inflatable chair for the bedroom or play area.
£15.00 plus £5.00 UK postage.

Cyberman Towel, Pre Order;
A large (150 cm x 75 cm) beach towel featuring the Doctor Who logo and a Cyberman!
£15.00 includes FREE UK postage.

BEFORE ORDERING, PLEASE CHECK OUR WEBSITE FOR THE LATEST PRICES AND AVAILABILITY. PRICES AND AVAILABILITY MAY BE SUBJECT TO CHANGE WITHOUT NOTICE. WE RESERVE THE RIGHT TO CHANGE PRICES AND AVAILABILITY WITHOUT NOTICE.

10thplanet

The Doctor Who Shop

Visit our retail store, only 40 Minutes by Tube from Central London!

For FAST & SECURE online shopping just visit doctorwhoshop.co.uk

Don't miss our unbeatable line-up of celebrity guest appearances!

Saturday April 7 • 12.00 - 2.00pm

IAN MCNIECE

signing copies of DOCTOR WHO
'IMMORTAL BELOVED' Big Finish CD.
CD: £10.99 plus £1.50 postage.

Saturday April 21 • 12.00 - 2.00pm

WILL BARTON
SAKUNTALA RAMANEE

signing copies of DOCTOR WHO
'SURVIVAL' on DVD and photographs.
DVD: £19.99 plus £1.50 postage.
Photographs: £10.00 plus £1.00 postage.

MIKE TUCKER

New Series Doctor Who Model Unit Supervisor signing autographs and related merchandise.

Saturday JUNE 2 • 1.30 - 3.30pm

ELISABETH SLADEN

signing copies of DOCTOR WHO
'ROBOT' on DVD and photographs.
DVD: £19.99 plus £1.50 postage.
Photographs: £10.00 plus £1.00 postage.

TOM CHADBON

signing copies of DOCTOR WHO
'NO MORE LIES' Big Finish CD.
CD: £10.99 plus £1.50 postage.

Saturday JUNE 30 • 12.00 - 2.00pm

PAUL DARROW
MARTIN GOWER

GLEN MCCOY
signing copies of DOCTOR WHO
'TIMELASH' on DVD and photographs.
DVD: £19.99 plus £1.50 postage.
Photographs: £10.00 plus £1.00 postage.

STANDING ORDERS; Receive your favourite Doctor Who ranges automatically, with many signed exclusives at no extra cost. Call us today for more information!

T 020 8591 5357
E contact@tenthplanet.co.uk
W www.tenthplanet.co.uk

10th Planet, 37a Vicarage Field Shopping Centre, Ripple Road, Barking, Essex, IG11 8DQ

© 2006 10th Planet Ltd. All rights reserved. Doctor Who is a registered trademark of BBC.

Classic Doctors

DOCTOR WHO

Brand New Adventures

YOU MAY HAVE SEEN IT ALL
BUT HAVE YOU HEARD IT ALL?

PETER DAVISON STARS AS THE FIFTH DOCTOR
IN A CONTINUING SERIES OF AUDIO DRAMAS.

OVER TWENTY BRAND NEW ADVENTURES WITH MORE TO COME.
FEATURING FAMILIAR FRIENDS AND OLD ENEMIES.

For more information, special offers and secure online ordering, visit:

www.bigfinish.com

Available from all good book shops.
Credit Card Hotline: Tel 01628 824102

Doctor Who and TARDIS are word marks of the British Broadcasting Corporation and are used under license. Doctor Who logo © 1996. Licensed by BBC Worldwide Ltd. The Dalek word mark and device mark are trademarks of the British Broadcasting Corporation and are used under license. The Dalek device mark © BBC/Terry Nation 1963. Ice Warriors © 1967 the Estate of Brian Haylen. Used under license. Cybermen © the estate of Kit Pedler and Gerry Davis 1966. Used under license. Ad by Alex Mallinson.

BIG FINISH